The delay dividend

Following West Asia war-linked construction disruptions, the Centre’s rare four-month breather offers housing projects a timely relief – developers weigh in

Team PropertyPlus

After much delay to real estate projects, owing to the ongoing war in West Asia disrupting supply chains and hampering construction activity, developers can heave a sigh of relief. The Centre has advised the state Real Estate Regulatory Authorities (RERAs) to grant a four-month extension to eligible housing projects. The advisory, issued by the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs, applies to projects registered on or before February 28, 2026.

“The durable answer isn’t just about macro policy – it’s more about how we build our cities. This translates to pushing faster towards energy-efficient designs, passive cooling, smart metering, and on-site renewable integration. Buyers are increasingly looking at monthly utility bills and climate-resilient homes. Developers can weave in sustainable energy solutions,” Shiv Garg, director, Fortesia Realty Pvt. Ltd. The move is welcomed by the sector as it relaxes housing project norms without greater loss. Industry experts weigh in:

Urban development

The real estate sector has been struggling with severe construction material shortages and a supply chain. This timely intervention, where it asks state RERAs to push out project timelines without penalties, gives developers breathing space. By recognising these disruptions as a war-like event, the Centre has shown real foresight, even if the situation is still rolling out in ways nobody fully expected. In practical terms, this will not only protect existing projects from regulatory defaults, but it will also safeguard homebuyers’ interests so that work stays orderly and doesn’t just stop in an abrupt halt

Nikhil Mawale, co-founder & CEO, PropertyDrone Realty

Commercial

Commercial real estate has been slammed with escalating costs and material shortages tied to the West Asia war. Regulatory certainty like this means developers can keep their attention on delivery and solid execution. Overall, it feels fairly balanced and pragmatic, like it takes the actual ground situation seriously while still keeping stakeholder confidence intact

Anurag Goel, director of Goel Ganga Developments

NEXT WEEK: the buyer’s point of view

Housing

The four-month extension is a pragmatic and balanced measure that acknowledges genuine supply-chain disruptions while supporting the orderly completion of projects. For homebuyer, it provides certainty that developers can maintain construction quality and fulfil their commitments without being unduly affected by circumstances beyond their control.

Sanjay Chugh, City head & director, ANAROCK Property Consultants, Chennai

Investment

For investors, the biggest driver of confidence is the assurance that quality projects will be completed. By providing relief to deserving projects under a transparent regulatory framework, the move helps safeguard invested capital, preserve long-term asset value, and strengthen confidence in India’s real estate market.

Mohit Ramsinghani, president, VTP Realty

Warehouse

Such calibrated policy interventions help maintain project momentum and reinforce confidence across the sector. In markets such as the Mumbai Metropolitan Region (MMR), where redevelopment and infrastructure-led growth are driving significant project activity, this support will help developers navigate short-term disruptions to deliver on time

Ravi Agarwal, chairman and managing director, Lloyds Realty Ltd

Infrastructure

Future projects will require more robust procurement strategies, diversified supply chains and a greater reliance on domestic sourcing wherever possible. At the policy level, there is also a need to build more responsive mechanisms for cost-escalation and risk-sharing into long-term infrastructure contracts

Avneesh Sood, director of Eros Group

Small homes, big gains

Higher yields, lower capital outlay and stronger rental demand make 1BHKs a compelling investment choice

Saurabh Garg

Do you know that instead of buying a single 3BHK, the same budget could quietly get you two income-generating 1BHKs and a smarter investment outcome? The numbers, drawn from six major cities between 2019 and 2025, prove it is a structurally superior investment approach for high-demand urban markets.

The core argument rests on a simple but persistent fact: 1BHK apartments generate higher rental yields, and two of them together costs less than one 3BHK unit.

Growing yield gap

Across all configurations studied, a clear hierarchy emerges: the smaller the apartment, the higher the yield. According to reports by No Broker, 1BHK units averaged 4.16% annually against 3BHK units at 3%. Put simply, for every ₹1 crore invested, a 1BHK earns roughly ₹4,16,000 in annual rent versus ₹3,00,000 from a 3BHK, a difference of over ₹1,10,000 every year, just in rent, on the same capital. What makes this gap particularly notable is that it has been widening. In 2019, the 1BHK yield was 3.84% versus the 3BHK's 2.92%, whereas the current gap is 4.16% for 1BHK and 3% for 3BHK. The return-to-office wave and post-pandemic migration toward employment hubs have driven a surge in demand for affordable, well-located 1BHK units, particularly in Bengaluru, Hyderabad, and Pune. Young professionals, students, and early-career migrants are choosing independence over shared accommodation, expanding the tenant pool for compact apartments at a pace that 3BHK supply simply does not match.

Capital cost advantage

Beyond yield, the strategy benefits from a structural pricing gap. On average, two 1BHK apartments in the same locality cost only 73% of a single 3BHK, meaning investors can deploy the same strategy for 27% less capital. The remaining funds can sit in fixed income, equities, or be reserved for a third property entirely.

This is not a temporary anomaly. Several structural forces sustain the 1BHK yield advantage. India's 20-35 age cohort is at its largest in history, and nuclear family formation is accelerating demand for independent rental housing. IT migration corridors in Bengaluru, Hyderabad, the NCR, and Pune attract hundreds of thousands of young professionals each year, all of whom need a practical, affordable place near work. These tenants are in the majority and looking for a 1-bedroom apartment.

The 3BHK faces a different structural problem. Its tenant pool families and senior professionals are narrower, move less frequently, and negotiate more aggressively on rent. A 10% rent increase on a 3BHK in a Bengaluru IT corridor means ₹4,000-₹5,000 more per month, which tenants resist or use as a trigger to consider buying. The same percentage increase on a 1BHK is ₹1,800-2,600, far easier to absorb. This dynamic means 1BHK landlords reset rents to market rates far more often, particularly in rising markets.

Owning two units also

On average, two 1BHK apartments in the same locality cost only 73% of a single 3BHK, meaning investors can deploy the same strategy for 27% less capital. The remaining funds can sit in fixed income, equities, or be reserved for a third property entirely.

provides built-in vacancy protection. A vacant month in a 3BHK means zero income. With two 1BHKs, the probability of both being empty simultaneously is substantially lower, and one unit continues generating returns during tenant transitions.

However, the two-1BHK strategy requires slightly more active management, two maintenance schedules, more tenant transitions and periodic repainting between occupancies.

Decision in practice

The 3BHK remains the right choice when the investor expects a specific infrastructure catalyst to drive appreciation, prefers a single long-term tenant, or may eventually occupy the property. For everyone else, particularly those building a rental income portfolio, the math strongly favours splitting up.

Tumbleweeds roll across the road, stark against the heat haze on the horizon, as we leave Ahmedabad city limits. In the suburbs, the landscape is a dry, dusty brown, which makes our destination all the more difficult to visualise: a massive 72,600 square-yard, man-made lake nestled in the heart of By the Waters, an upcoming ultra-exclusive 100-acre residential estate by Suryam Developers.

Yes, a lake. In the middle of parched scrubland. The surprise lessens when we learn Witteveen+Bos has engineered the hydrology for this project. The Dutch know a thing or two about working with water in unlikely places – after all, they literally wrangled their country from the sea.

Just 35 km from Ahmedabad, the lake, or Blue Heart as it is called, is being planned as the idyllic backdrop for 99 bespoke waterfront villas (made in collaboration with SCDA Architects from Singapore) at Suryam's new residential estate. "The inspiration was a refusal to accept that luxury in India must mean verticality and density," says G.M. Patel, founder and chairman of Suryam Group.

Early doubts about the feasibility of the project evaporated when Witteveen+Bos came on board. "What they introduced was the concept of the waterbody as a closed-loop biological system rather than a static body requiring constant chemical intervention," says Patel. "That shift in thinking changed everything about how the lake was designed, from its depth profile to its circulation, to the way the surrounding landscape feeds and filters it."

Blue Heart in Ahmedabad

Man-made lakes are often a fraught topic. While they can offer significant benefits such as water storage, flood control, and habitat creation, they can also have an adverse environmental impact if improperly done, resulting in anything from increased methane emissions to harmful algae bloom and, ironically, even habitat destruction.

India has a long history of man-made lakes. Across the country, erstwhile maharajas and nizams constructed them as royal symbols and sources of irrigation. Examples include Jaisamand and Pichola in Udaipur, Osman Sagar in Hyderabad, Hirakud in Odisha, and Bhojtal in Madhya Pradesh, the oldest man-made lake in India. Many, however, have been in the news for all the wrong reasons. Bellandur Lake in Karnataka, for instance, has been notorious for contaminating groundwater and surrounding vegetation (as around 500 million litres of untreated sewage is dumped in it daily). Similarly, Bhojtal is facing severe ecological decline because of shrinking catchment areas, rapid urbanisation and untreated sewage. Real-time monitoring and other initiatives are now trying to regenerate its wetland ecology.

View of the property and the lake; and (below) G.M. Patel. (SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT)

"Eutrophication, or excess nutrient loading – primarily nitrogen and phosphorus – is the main failure mode of constructed lakes in warm climates. It drives algae proliferation, which depletes dissolved oxygen and suppresses biodiversity," explains Dhaval Makhmalwala, master plan and landscape architect, who worked on the project with the team from Witteveen+Bos.

This is where Blue Heart hopes to be different. According to Makhmalwala, their counter-strategy addresses all three red flags. "The closed-loop design eliminates wastewater ingress, the depth profile prevents stratification [which enables phosphorus loading], and continuous water movement by an automated inlet system denies algal blooms the stagnant conditions they require. The native macrophyte fringe [aquatic plants such as reeds and cattails] along the bank provides a biological nutrient sink that, over time, will outperform any chemical treatment regime."

A work in progress

When we finally reach By the Waters, it's evening. Pale pinks and yellows ripple over the lake's still surface, and a cool breeze reaches us, bringing some much-needed relief from the day's residual heat.

It's clear the lake is a work in progress. The riparian vegetation is still establishing itself along the banks. The water hasn't achieved the clear blue that the designers promise it will be in the months to come. But many of the future highlights are already coming up: a 1.5-km lakeside promenade, 2-km kayak trail, over-water pavilions, and multiple garden environments – "all curated to ensure that the water is lived with, not merely looked at," as Patel puts it.

As work kicks into high gear, and the self-sustaining biological ecosystem comes to life, architect Dhaval Makhmalwala shares more about the project. Edited excerpts:

Question: How is the lake being built?

Answer: We began with a full system analysis to understand the hydrogeology of the site, soil permeability profiles, seasonal groundwater fluctuation patterns, and a detailed evapotranspiration model for this microclimate. In my experience, most constructed waterbodies fail because the engineering responds to a generalised idea of a lake rather than to the specific conditions of the site.

The basin geometry that came out of that analysis is functional, not decorative. The depth gradients, bank profiles, inlet positions serve a hydraulic or biological purpose. A lake that moves, lives. Thus the closed-loop water sourcing logic. And what we are commissioning over the next 18 months is the automated intelligence that governs that movement: a real-time sensor network feeding into a management system that regulates inflow through multiple peripheral inlet points.

Q: What baseline ecological survey was conducted?

A: The pre-construction ecological baseline characterisation covered vegetation, ground-level biodiversity indicators, soil taxonomy, and existing hydrology. The proximity to Thol Lake was something we took seriously. Thol is a Ramsar-designated wetland of ecological significance, and any new permanent waterbody in its vicinity will interact with that system. Our buffer zone assessment has informed both our water-sourcing decisions and the native riparian planting palette for the estate's margins. The formal biodiversity baseline monitoring programme is being established over the next 12 months as the landscape matures.

Q: Critics argue that man-made lakes in water-stressed regions divert a resource which communities need most.

A: We take this seriously. The Blue Heart is a closed-loop system and not a point of continuous extraction from a shared aquifer. The groundwater that replenishes the lake is cycled through the estate's landscape irrigation requirements, and back into the soil through passive recharge. The hydraulic gradient created by a permanent standing body of surface water actively promotes infiltration back into the surrounding aquifer. Over time, a well-managed waterbody can improve local groundwater conditions rather than deplete them. This is measurable, and we will be measuring it through piezometric monitoring [that determines groundwater levels and pore pressure] as the system reaches operational maturity.

Q: What ecological benefits does this waterbody offer?

A: The ecological dividend operates across several registers: urban heat island mitigation, passive groundwater recharge, biodiversity habitat creation, carbon sequestration through riparian vegetation, and microclimatic humidity regulation. The measurement programme for each of these is being designed now and will be formally operational over the next 12 to 18 months.

Q: Man-made lakes in India often become stagnant and polluted.

A: A waterbody that depends on continuous active human intervention to stay healthy will eventually fail when that intervention lapses. We have tried to build a system where ecological health is the path of least resistance rather than a continuous management effort. The closed-loop biology, automated flow management, biological fringe, all reduce the dependence on human vigilance to maintain the lake's condition. A sensor network provides early warning when something is drifting.
