The wardrobe, reimagined

From a pull-out prayer bench in Chennai to integrated workspaces in Mumbai, wardrobes are taking on new roles

Rashmi Gopal Rao

Homes today are becoming increasingly compact and accommodating multiple functions in them is definitely a challenge. Storage is undoubtedly one of the most critical aspects of it. When designing wardrobes for compact Indian homes, the real challenge is creating enough storage without allowing it to dominate the room or compromise the overall experience of the space. "Typically, storage in Indian homes extends far beyond accommodating clothing. It needs to account for everything from luggage, seasonal wear and valuables to household essentials, décor, kitchenware, and other everyday belongings," says Rahul Mistri, founder and principal designer of Open Atelier, an interior design studio in Mumbai. He added such requirements have also expanded to include home-office essentials, study materials, and technology since the pandemic. As lifestyles continue to evolve while apartment sizes remain relatively compact, storage requirements have only grown. Homeowners today are much more conscious about how they use space. CONTINUED ON

Amit Jain

Every real estate cycle brings a familiar debate: should buyers and developers look at the next emerging corridor, or should they stay invested in established neighbourhoods? While new growth pockets will always have their place, the market today is favouring locations that have already proven themselves.

Across Mumbai, established neighbourhoods are continuing to outperform newer markets not only in terms of price appreciation but also in buyer demand, rental strength. This isn't a short-term trend; it reflects how home buyers have changed over the last few years.

India's housing market has stayed steady despite global uncertainty. Industry estimates suggest that over 3 lakh homes will be launched in 2026, according to a Cushman and Wakefield report, showing continued confidence in demand. At the same time, higher-value homes are doing better. According to a JLL report, properties priced above ₹1 crore made up nearly 62% of sales in H1 2025, up from 51% a year earlier. Overall, buyers are no longer looking only at price; they are more focused on long-term value, good locations, and everyday livability.

In Mumbai, areas like Goregaon, Malad, Borivali, Kandivali, Andheri, Bhandup and Mulund have grown steadily over many years. Today, they are not just residential pockets but full neighbourhoods with excellent social infrastructure such as schools, hospitals, offices, shopping options and strong transport links.

What sets them apart is the fact that everything is already in place. Unlike newer areas where infrastructure takes time to develop, these locations offer certainty from the start. People know what kind of lifestyle they are getting; investors have a clearer sense of rental demand, and residents enjoy a more settled, convenient way of living.

Building on trust

Why buyers are choosing established neighbourhoods over cheaper, emerging locations as redevelopment reshapes Mumbai's housing market

Infrastructure has only strengthened this advantage. Metro connectivity, new road networks and improved east-west links have made several western suburban micro-markets even more accessible. Micro-markets supported by new infrastructure continue to outperform the broader market, with several locations across Mumbai and MMR recording double-digit capital appreciation as improved connectivity reshapes homebuyer preferences.

Meaning of affordability

Affordability still matters, but buyers are defining it differently today. The conversation is no longer limited to the price per square foot. Buyers are evaluating the time they save on daily travel, the quality of civic infrastructure, access to schools and healthcare, and the overall convenience of living in a well-connected neighbourhood.

This explains why mature locations continue to command strong demand even when newer corridors offer lower entry prices. For many families, paying a little more upfront translates into better everyday living and stronger long-term appreciation.

Redevelopment core growth

Mumbai's housing market is steadily shifting toward redevelopment as the primary source of new supply. With paucity of land, the city is increasingly relying on the renewal of existing housing stock to meet demand. This shift is also being reinforced by policy changes in Maharashtra, where recent reforms have simplified housing society procedures and approvals and reducing friction in decision-making.

On the ground, the scale of redevelopment activity is expanding noticeably, particularly across the western suburbs. Cluster redevelopment projects are now routinely taking shape at a size that would earlier have been associated with greenfield developments. A large redevelopment initiative in Kandivali East is expected to generate an estimated gross development value of around ₹1,100 crore, while another project in the wider western suburb belt is estimated at over ₹350 crore. These numbers reflect not just rising confidence among developers but also a structural shift in how established neighbourhoods are being repositioned.

What makes this cycle different is that redevelopment is no longer confined to isolated buildings. It is gradually becoming a neighbourhood-level transformation, where ageing housing societies are being replaced with planned developments that improve infrastructure efficiency while retaining the existing social fabric.

Hyperlocal expertise

Real estate is always local, but today it has become even more micro, almost hyperlocal.

Every neighbourhood in Mumbai has its own feel, rules and way of working. In redevelopment-heavy areas across the western and central suburbs, this becomes even more important because every project needs close coordination with existing residents and a clear understanding of local expectations.

Developers who understand these micro-markets over time are usually better placed. They don't just add new buildings; they try to fit into the neighbourhood and improve what already exists.

The same shift is visible in rentals as well. As living costs rise in the main city areas, more people are moving to well-connected suburbs that offer a better balance between cost and convenience. Mumbai continues to see strong activity, with over 80,000 property registrations in H1 2026, but demand is now clearly split across different pockets. Established western suburbs remain stable because of strong connectivity and job access, while areas like Thane are seeing more demand from budget-focused tenants. Overall, better infrastructure, especially around Metro lines, is making connectivity more important than location status, which keeps established neighbourhoods in steady demand.

Mumbai's growth story is now moving into a new phase. It is less about spreading outward and more about improving what already exists.

For a city like Mumbai, the real opportunity is to upgrade established neighbourhoods through redevelopment. The idea is not just to build modern homes, but to do it in a way that respects the communities already living there.

In the end, real estate is not only about brick & mortar. It is about people and the neighbourhoods they grow in. When redevelopment is done with care, quality and long-term thinking, established areas continue to do better because they offer something new markets take time to build, i.e., trust, familiarity and a complete ecosystem that already works.

For decades, the language of luxury real estate and hospitality centred on marble lobbies, imported fittings and skyline or ocean views. Today, a quieter but equally powerful signifier of prestige is taking root – literally.

Across residential developments and destination retreats alike, landscaping has moved from the margins of a project brief to its centrepiece, with developers now treating green design as a defining amenity rather than a decorative afterthought.

Backdrop to blueprint

The shift is structural, not cosmetic. Where landscaping was once finalised after the architectural plan was locked, forward-thinking developers are now designing around it, orienting built spaces to preserve mature tree cover, carving courtyards and waterbodies into masterplans and reserving prime area for gardens and groves rather than purely for built-up space. This “green-first” approach reflects a recognition that buyers and guests increasingly experience a property through its open spaces as much as its interiors.

Nowhere is this more evident than in wellness-led hospitality, where the surrounding landscape isn’t an accompaniment to the experience it is the experience. Backwater-facing retreats and coastal properties that integrate indigenous flora, water bodies and shaded natural walkways are increasingly marketed on the strength of their grounds as much as their rooms.

The pandemic-era rediscovery of outdoor space has matured

New green luxury

Landscaping is becoming a defining element of premium real estate and hospitality, shaping experience, wellness and value into a lasting lifestyle expectation. Guests and buyers are now willing to pay a measurable premium for access to well-designed nature walking trails, meditation gardens and biodiversity zones that support physical and mental wellbeing. Landscaping has effectively become a wellness amenity in its own right, sitting alongside spas and curated wellness programming in guest priority lists, and in many cases outranking them. For destination wellness retreats in particular, this means the grounds themselves, the density of tree cover, the presence of water, and the sense of retreat from urban noise are now central to brand positioning, and not peripheral to it.

Design follows experience

Across the industry, the sequencing of design decisions is changing. Landscape architects are increasingly being brought into masterplanning conversations at the outset rather than at the finishing stages, with tree cover, water features and open space treated as load-bearing elements of the guest or resident experience. This is particularly visible in coastal and backwater destinations, where preserving the natural topography rather than overwriting it has become the differentiator that discerning travellers and buyers actively seek out.

The commercial logic is straightforward: well-designed nature retains value. Mature landscaping is difficult to replicate and expensive to fast-track, which makes it one of the few amenities that appreciates with time rather than depreciating like fittings or finishes.

As developers and hospitality operators compete to differentiate their offerings in an increasingly discerning market, landscaping is emerging as one of the few amenities that appeals universally across price points, geographies, and use cases. It photographs well, ages gracefully and delivers wellness and sustainability benefits that resonate with today’s buyers and guests. Landscaping addresses all three expectations simultaneously. It creates memorable experiences, supports wellness, strengthens sustainability and enhances long-term asset value. More importantly, it transforms a property from simply being a place to stay or live into a place where people genuinely want to spend time.

The future of luxury will not be defined by how much developers build, but by how thoughtfully they preserve, integrate, and celebrate nature. In that future, landscaping will no longer be viewed as an amenity – it will be the foundation upon which the next generation of premium real estate and hospitality is built.

The writer is CEO of Himalia Prime Assets.

Where landscaping was once finalised after the architectural plan was locked, developers are now designing around it, orienting built spaces to preserve mature tree cover, carving courtyards and waterbodies into masterplans and reserving prime area for gardens and groves

“Earlier, wardrobes were often treated as standalone storage units. Now, home owners expect them to be customised around their lifestyle,” says Sneha Ostawal, founder and principal architect of Source Architecture, a Bengaluru-based architecture and interior studio.

An ideal layout

The most effective wardrobe layouts are those that integrate seamlessly into the architecture of the room. “Full-height, floor-to-ceiling wardrobes maximise vertical storage while eliminating dust-collecting top ledges. Wall-to-wall wardrobes create clean visual continuity and utilise every available inch of space,” says Suny Akber, founder and principal architect of Feel & Bari, a Chennai-based architecture and interior practice.

He adds, “Depending on the room, we also incorporate loft storage, integrated study tables, bedside units, window seating and dresser units within the wardrobe composition to reduce the need for additional furniture. Corner wardrobes, recessed niches and concealed utility cabinets further improve efficiency. Ultimately, the best layout is one that makes the room feel larger while accommodating more storage.” Full height units also create a cleaner visual line, making ceilings appear taller.

Sonali Bhagwati, design partner of Designplus Architecture, an architecture studio in Delhi, believes, “Where

Textures in demand

- Matte finishes continue to dominate
- Subtle wood grains add warmth
- Lightly textured finishes provide tactile richness space permits, L-shaped wardrobes can efficiently utilise corners, while shallow accessory units can occupy otherwise underutilised niches. Internally, flexibility is just as important. Adjustable shelving, pullout accessories, season-specific storage spaces, and custom compartments help the homeowners use the volume better.”

Drawers for accessories, storage for laundry, charging stations, lit shelves, and specialised compartments have all become standard demands in today’s times as spaces have become multifunctional.

“In response to functional shift, I find it more meaningful to design storage as one single integrated system. Instead of introducing separate pieces for bookshelves or study tables, wardrobes can seamlessly incorporate them along with filing cabinets, printer niches, charging stations and display shelving. This keeps work essentials organised,” adds Mistri.

Materials and colours

There is a strong preference for materials and finishes that are durable, responsibly sourced and designed for longevity. Home owners today are genuinely conscious of investing in materials that age well, require less maintenance and align with broader sustainability goals.

“Today’s wardrobes are designed to blend seamlessly with the overall interiors. Soft neutral shades like beige, taupe, greige, and warm whites remain popular because they make rooms feel more spacious. Fluted panels, bronze or tinted glass, and printed ambience-matching graphics on glass shutters are becoming increasingly popular as they add character while keeping the wardrobe visually light,” says Preeti Porwal, design director and co-founder of Icon Projects Inspace Pvt. Ltd (IPIPL), an interior design studio in Mumbai.

Handleless wardrobes are again a popular feature which create uninterrupted elevations and reduce visual clutter. “Sliding doors work well in compact bedrooms where shutter clearance is limited. Fluted surfaces introduce texture and break the monotony of large wardrobe shutters,” says Rajkumar Kumawat, founder of Rajkumar Architects, an interior studio in Jaipur. The latter create a tactile element that adds a degree of softness to large wardrobe walls, regardless of whether the underlying material is wood, laminate, or glass.

Lighting and maintenance

Lighting has become far more deliberate and functional. “Concealed LED strips along shelves and hanging rods are now common, not just for practicality but because good internal light genuinely changes how a small room feels once the shutters open. In bedrooms, we keep this soft and warm. In foyers, where a wardrobe often doubles as shoe and utility storage, we prefer brighter, more functional light, since that space is used quickly and needs clarity,” says Aastha Sehgal, principal designer & brand director of House of Albero, a product studio in Noida.

She adds, “In kitchens, where tall units double as pantry storage, moisture resistant, easy to clean surfaces take priority, while still keeping the material language consistent with the rest of the home.”

Another trend according to Mistri is the greater integration of concealed storage, pocket doors and display niches that balance functionality with visual interest. Rather than standing out as individual features, these elements work best when they come together as part of a cohesive design language.

Balancing functionality, aesthetics, and durability comes down to making practical choices right at the planning stage. “Start by choosing frame and door materials that suit your daily habits and local climate, not just what looks good. Ventilation is equally important. Wardrobes tend to trap moisture because they are closed for a good part of the day, which can damage the material and even the contents inside,” says Sonakshi Gupta, founder and creative director, SIORAA, a luxury interior studio in Delhi.

She gives a simple solution. “Make provision for airflow, which can be done via louvres, subtle mesh vents, or small cutouts integrated into the back or side panels. Edge banding and finishing quality also matter because poor-edge sealing is often where moisture begins to creep in.”

Here is a look at some wardrobe solutions for compact homes.

Materials

- PU-finished shutters for their seamless appearance and durability
- Natural wood veneers that introduce warmth and richness
- Anti-fingerprint laminates for everyday practicality
- Tinted or fluted glass to visually lighten larger wardrobes while adding sophistication
- Quartz or stone surfaces integrated into dresser counters where appropriate

Ember home, Source Architecture; Bengaluru

Ember Home is a compact 1,000 sq. ft three-bedroom apartment where storage was carefully integrated into the design without compromising the openness of the interiors. Floor-to-ceiling wardrobes maximise storage while maintaining clean visual lines. Apple wood veneers were used consistently across all three bedrooms to create warmth and continuity, while custom laminates added durability and refinement. “A distinctive feature is that the inside of every wardrobe reflects the dominant colour palette of its respective bedroom, making storage feel more personalised. In the master bedroom, the wardrobes are paired with soft blush accents, while the guest bedroom adopts richer, darker tones. The son’s room uses shades of blue, reflecting his personality while maintaining the home’s overall minimalist language. The wardrobes were fabricated using Century Ply with custom laminates, ensuring both durability and a high-quality finish,” adds Ostawal.

How to maintain

- Avoid overloading shelves
- Hinges, channels, and sliding mechanisms should be checked periodically
- Ensure moisture does not accumulate inside, use silica gel packets which help absorb moisture
- Wipe shutters and handles with a dry or slightly damp soft cloth, harsh chemical cleaners dull the finishes over time

Beyond 900, Feel & Bari; Chennai

Beyond 900 at 900 sq. ft demonstrates how intelligent wardrobe planning can transform compact living. Full-height PU-finished wardrobes maximise storage while maintaining visual lightness. Warm wood veneers, soft neutrals, walnut finishes and tinted glass establish continuity, while concealed lighting enhances usability. “Textured paint replaces heavy wall panelling, reinforcing the sense of openness and spatial clarity. The pooja unit becomes one of the home’s defining moments. CNC-crafted shutters, custom-designed handles, and a concealed pull-out bench fitted with hidden wheels allow the homeowner to comfortably sit during morning prayers before seamlessly returning the space to its original form. Nearby, the crockery unit extends beyond storage to become an architectural composition in its own right,” adds Akber.

Serene cove, Open Atelier Mumbai; Mumbai

The wardrobe design for the 1,600 sq. ft Serene Cove demonstrates how integrated storage can enhance everyday functionality without overwhelming the visual language of a home. “In the primary suite, the wardrobe is designed to become an extension of the bedroom. Warm wood veneers, smoked glass shutters, slim metal profiles and integrated lighting create a calm, tactile palette while improving accessibility and everyday usability,” says Mistri.

Within the kitchen, handleless cabinetry is organised into dedicated zones for pantry storage, appliances and utilities, allowing the space to remain visually uncluttered. Fluted glass partitions maintain a sense of openness while subtly defining functional areas. Storage solutions continue into the child’s room, where wardrobes, a study desk, open shelving and display niches are integrated into a single composition.
