'Stormwater drain work makes tardy progress'

N. CHITTI BABU

Stormwater drain work at Valluvar Road at Jai Nagar in Arumbakkam has come to a standstill. There is no sign of work for more than a month now; the work had begun in December-end, 2025.

We learnt that the work has been put on hold as electricity junction boxes had to be removed from the construction site.

Though the road is 800 metres long, SWD construction is being carried out only on a 250-metre stretch, that is from the intersection of Valluvar Road at Jai Nagar First Street Main Road to the intersection on Jai Nagar Second Main Road.

The delay in work shows poor planning and coordination between the Greater Chennai Corporation and Tamil Nadu Generation & Distribution Corporation Limited.

Sewage has entered the trenches dug up for stormwater drain construction. The stink from the trenches is unbearable for residents living in the vicinity. Residents also find it difficult to take their vehicles in and out of the gates.

Valluvar Road is connected to Panchali Amman Kovil Street at one end and Thiru Veedhi Amman Kovil Street at the other. As both these streets provide access to Poonamalle High Road, Valluvar Road witnesses good traffic during peak hours.

Therefore, the work has to be completed at the earliest.

Tiruvallur Astro Club is a platform for astronomy enthusiasts from neighbourhoods in and around Avadi; a peak into their regular style of functioning

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

On March 3, skywatchers queued up outside Infinitachin Knowledge Park in Pakkam from 6 p.m. onwards.

Likewise, on February 28, children accompanied by their parents lined up at Knowledge and Study Centre, Parithupattu in Avadi after sunset.

The former had to do with the lunar eclipse; the latter was an event organised on National Science Day. Both events were organised by Tiruvallur Astro Club.

Started in 2021 as an affiliate of Tamil Nadu Astronomy and Science Society, the Club has been able to bring together many astronomy enthusiasts from this part of the city by offering an array of activities.

The effort by members, most of them volunteers, is commendable.

Three years ago, Rajarajeswari K., had invested in a high-end telescope to quench the curiosity of her son who loves studying the night sky like a book.

"It was only fair that I passed on the benefit of owning a telescope to others, so every time we organise an event we book a cab and take it with us," says Rajarajeswari, who is secretary, Tiruvallur Astro Club and executive committee member of Tamil Nadu Astronomy and Science Society.

She says the Club has 25 executive members, all from different professions, who elected the core team members. They do not follow a target of organising an event every month but take up activities depending on the convenience of members.

became a member of the Club three months ago to understand astronomy better and to nurture interest in his two schoolgoing children. "Every week, they organise online programmes and seeing one such demonstration my son replicated 'Flight movement using Bernoulli Principle' for his school project," says the entrepreneur.

The Club does not have a fixed venue for meeting and are open to residents suggesting any space that can accommodate a gathering of 50-60 people. They take up workshops on astronomy, day sky watching and similar topics.

This summer, the Club plans to organise a camp for children.

lebration and among special occasions when they make it a point to gather with other "sky-focussed" people.

"Anybody can become a member of the club. We have a WhatsApp group that we created recently where we exchange information of activities that we are conducting and programmes by other clubs as well," says Rajarajeswari, who works with an academy and is a resource person for Tiruvallur District Government Model School.

'A wild goose chase at a bus terminus'

Vallalar Nagar temporary bus terminus on Wall Tax Road in Kondithope.

T. GUNSEELAN

Chaos reigns at the temporary bus terminus of Vallalar Nagar that is functioning from an open ground on Wall Tax Road in Kondithope. The ground is earthen, uneven and stones protrude. Buses are not parked in an orderly manner. Even buses of a particular route are parked here and there and commuters have no idea which among them will start first. Commuters have to sprint and board the buses.

Likewise, temporary bus termini have been set up at Royapuram and Island Grounds.

Buses that were operated from Broadway are now operated from these two termini. The temporary termini are spacious and dedicated bays with signboards have been provided. But buses do not park at the bays they are meant to. Therefore, commuters have to go in search of their buses.

Brick Kiln Road renamed Rettamalai Srinivasan Road

Rettamalai Srinivasan (from The Hindu Archives) and the new name board at the junction of Strahans Road and Cooks Road.

In honour of Rettamalai Srinivasan (July 7, 1859 to September 18, 1945) who fought for the rights of the oppressed castes, Greater Chennai Corporation renamed Brick Kiln Road in Otteri as Rettamalai Srinivasan Road recently.

According to a press release, his mortal remains were laid to rest at the cremation ground located in the erstwhile Brick Kiln Road in Otteri. Greater Chennai Corporation passed a resolution in May 2025 to rename the road in honour of the activist.

Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.K. Stalin inaugurated the new name boards of the road through video-conferencing on February 26, 2026, added the release.

One is located at the junction of Strahans Road and Cooks Road and the other at the junction of Pursaiwalkam High Road.

The road falls under Ward 76 of Zone - 6 Thiru Vi Ka Nagar.

AC shelter at Retteri junction bus stop

The images show the recently inaugurated air-conditioned bus shelter at Retteri junction on Paper Mills Road near United India Colony First Street in Kolathur.

The facility, set up by the Chennai Metropolitan Development Authority (CMDA) at a cost of ₹1.61 crore, was inaugurated on February 23. In addition, a small park has been set up around the facility at a cost of ₹40.59 lakh. The 54 seat-shelter which is equipped with six air-conditioners has a drinking water facility, fans, and charging points for cell phones. It has got three entrances. The transparent doors and windows let commuters know the arrival of the buses. Buses headed towards Broadway, Thiru Vi Ka Nagar, Perambur, MKB Nagar and Kumaran Nagar are among the various services that halt at this stop. The AC shelter has been well-received by the commuters. "This stop had a shelter earlier but given the good number of commuters it witnesses the shelter was not adequate. So commuters had to wait on the road which witnesses heavy traffic. This is a narrow thoroughfare and hence commuters had to keep moving here and there giving way to the vehicles. Now, we are seated comfortably. However, a line of autorickshaws are parked in front of the shelter, especially during peak hours and they hinder commuters' way to board the buses," says a regular commuter.

Commuters also raised the issue of tipplers using the AC shelter. In an inebriated state, they enter the shelter and occupy an entire bench, lying sprawled across its length. Greater Chennai Corporation should take stringent measures to curb this menace, say commuters.

Another shelter

CMDA has set up another shelter at Retteri junction which is located on 200 Feet Inner Ring Road (also known as Jawaharlal Nehru Main Road). It is not an air-conditioned one but with ornamental lights and benches, the shelter is distinct from other shelters in the city. Here, buses towards Koyambedu, Guindy, Tambaram, and Kelambakkam halt, with good frequency. This stop also witnesses a good number of commuters but it lacked a shelter earlier. Welcoming this facility, commuters suggested a basic shelter be provided at the Retteri junction stop meant for buses towards Madhavaram.

DG Vaishnav College has its 58th Graduation Day

Dwaraka Doss Govindhan Doss Vaishnav College conducted its 58th Graduation Day on February 28. S. Santhosh Baboo, principal of the college, presented the annual report. In his address, he mentioned that the institution recorded a pass percentage of 82% at the undergraduate level and 94% at the postgraduate level.

The Principal noted that many postgraduate students had cleared competitive examinations such as NET and SET and are currently serving as assistant professors. He said that many undergraduate students have secured admissions in premier higher education institutions to pursue their postgraduate studies. Baboo said that the college is aligning its future plans with Sustainable Development Goals and strengthening its Innovation Council framework; and he emphasised the need to enhanced research, innovation, and institutional growth.

Chief Guest G. Ravi, Vice-Chancellor of Alagappa University, asked the graduates to cultivate creativity, critical thinking and adaptability. "Dream big, work hard, and success will follow," said Ravi.

Have you invited a Madras Mali to your garden?

They grow gardens in other people's backyards but the blooms extend into their living rooms. On International Women's Day, a conversation with Madras Malis, who are underprivileged women trained in organic gardening practices by a unique empowerment programme designed by Chennai Resilience Centre

SHARON JESSICA MICHAEL

Many had spent years as homemakers with little opportunity for paid work. Today, as part of the Madras Malis initiative, they travel across neighbourhoods helping households establish and maintain organic kitchen gardens.

The programme traces its roots to the Chennai Resilience Centre's Chennai Urban Farming Initiative, launched in 2021 to promote organic edible gardening in urban spaces. The idea was simple: encourage residents to grow food at home, both as a source of nutrition and as a way to create greener, climate-resilient neighbourhoods where plants help reduce urban heat. Workshops and training sessions were organised with residents, teachers and community groups across the city. But as participation grew, organisers began noticing a recurring challenge. While many residents were eager to start kitchen gardens, sustaining them required technical knowledge most did not possess.

"Residents often told us that even after attending workshops, maintaining a garden was still difficult," says Ayesha Ajmal, Junior Research Associate and Communications Manager at the Chennai Resilience Centre, who coordinates Mali assignments, manages social media, and assists with training sessions. "There were challenges with pests, soil health and identifying the right inputs to use."

Organisers also recognised another gap. While gardeners were available in the city, most focused on routine tasks such as watering or pruning. Few had the expertise to maintain edible gardens using organic techniques or diagnose plant health problems.

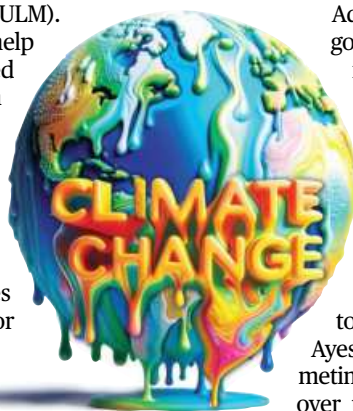

To address this, while also creating livelihood opportunities, the initiative began collaborating with the Tamil Nadu Urban Livelihoods Mission (TNULM). Women from self-help groups were invited to participate in specialised gardening training. This effort gradually evolved into the Madras Mali programme. Ayesha underlines that eligibility for participating in the training programme is predicated on a woman's membership in a self-help group registered under TNULM.

Between 2022 and 2024, the initiative operated as a pilot under the Urban Thottam project, experimenting with training formats while connecting trained women with households seeking help. By 2025, the programme was formally structured and launched under the name Madras Mali, with a dedicated website, social media presence and a defined list of services. Since 2023, nearly 250 women have received training. The training is designed in stages. Participants begin with fundamentals – soil preparation, plant varieties and common pests.

Advanced sessions go deeper into pruning, identifying fungal infections and diagnosing nutrient deficiencies. "These sessions are usually conducted in modules lasting around two to three hours," Ayesha explains. "Sometimes they take place over two or three days their confidence. B. Geetha from Taramani says the work has given her a sense of financial independence. "Earlier, I depended on my husband even for small things. If my children asked for a pencil or a book, I had to ask him for money. Now I can manage these small expenses myself." Appreciation from residents keeps her motivated too. "Residents sometimes send photos of the harvest. Seeing that makes me feel very satisfied." Others say the programme has expanded their world beyond their immediate neighbourhoods.

V. Prabha from R.A. Puram, who has been working as a Mali for three years, says the experience has made her more confident. "Earlier I hardly stepped outside my area. Now I know some bus routes and I can interact with more people." Gardening has also become a passion. "I keep encouraging people around me to grow more plants at home."

Their work has extended beyond private homes to schools and community institutions, including a Greater Chennai Corporation High School at Kamaraj Avenue in Adyar, the Bala Mandir Kamaraj Trust in Teynampet, Little Flower Nursery and Primary School in Adambakkam and Government Higher Secondary School in Sholinganallur. Students are often involved in sowing and harvesting, turning gardens into learning spaces, with vegetables sometimes used in the institutions' kitchens. "Seeing them eat the greens they harvest for lunch feels more fulfilling than the money," says one of the Madras Malis, M. Krishnaveni from Chintadripet.

The challenges

Like many livelihood initiatives, the programme comes with challenges. Working through Chennai's summers can be gruelling, and the work occasionally involves physically demanding tasks such as carrying heavy pots. Managing client expectations has also required attention; organisers now address this by clearly explaining the scope of work to both parties before assignments begin.

Despite these challenges, the initiative continues to grow largely through word of mouth. Many clients who first hear about the service through friends or neighbours eventually become repeat users. Those interested in availing the Madras Mali service can contact the team via WhatsApp at 9176588007. More details are available at urbanthottam.com/madras-mali-veg-garden-kit/ and @urbanthottam on Instagram.

depending on the women's availability."

Beyond classroom sessions, participants are also exposed to organic farming at scale. In late 2023, a group attended a residential programme at a farm run by the Centre for Indian Knowledge Systems near Vedanthangal, where they explored traditional vegetable varieties, visited rice fields and participated in organic farming demonstrations.

The programme also emphasises entrepreneurial skills. Participants learn to prepare organic pesticides and plant growth promoters using locally available ingredients, which they can market to clients. They are also trained to set up composting systems and guide households in converting kitchen waste into compost. For the Malis, minimum payment is fixed at ₹850 for five hours; the Malis receive the payment directly from the clients and Chennai Resilience Centre does not receive a commission.

Works of women artists on view at Egmore museum today

The organisers of the event

The Department of Museums is organising an artists camp for women on March 7 and 8 at the Gallery of Contemporary Art in Egmore. More than 70 women artists from across Tamil Nadu will be participating in this special event, a majority being from Chennai.

On March 7, there will be a live painting session and on March 8, the completed artworks will be exhibited at the gallery in celebration of International Women's Day.

The idea behind this camp was put forward by three Chennai-based artists Sathya N. Prabhu, Charanya Rajesh and Gayathri Balaji. "We initially planned to celebrate International Women's Day with a spot painting event and exhibition. When we approached the museum, we were surprised by the enthusiastic support extended by the Department of Museums" says Charanya.

The event will see budding and aspiring artists, some juggling full-time jobs, working on different mediums and networking with each other.

This initiative aims to provide a meaningful platform for showcasing the talent of women artists and promoting art and creativity.

The event encourages women, especially homemakers, to come and see the works and interact with artists to see how this can be taken up as a profession.
