Dubai realty boom pause

After years of a Golden Visa-driven boom, Gulf tensions trigger a wait-and-watch mood among Indian investors

Lalatendu Mishra

Fifteen to 20 years ago, when the going was tough, officials and agents of Dubai-based real-estate companies would visit Mumbai and other key cities in India. They showcased and aggressively marketed their projects, highlighting comparative advantages in pricing and rental income. The aim was to persuade Indians to invest in property or buy a second home. The impact was swift: within two weeks of the war, the Dubai Financial Market Real Estate Index (DFMREI) had fallen 21 per cent, while property transaction volumes reportedly declined 38 per cent year-on-year in the first 13 days. The sales pitch focused largely on price. A Dubai apartment was typically priced at about one-third the cost of a south Mumbai apartment. It also promised rental yields of 6-8 per cent, compared with just 1-2 per cent in Mumbai. But that situation changed dramatically with the introduction of the UAE Golden Visa programme in 2019, and Dubai emerged as a dependable global business destination and a haven in the post-COVID era. Due to the local government's ability to handle the pandemic, citizens from many countries across Asia and Europe flocked to the city and made it their primary home. This, in turn, fuelled unprecedented demand for luxury real-estate, as well as high-quality office and retail space.

New office standard

Ergonomic furniture, flexible layouts and healthier environments are transforming workspaces across India

Rajat Kapur

For a long time, offices in India all looked pretty much the same. Straight rows of desks, the same chairs everywhere, meeting rooms tucked away along the edges. The main goal? Save on costs. But that's changing fast. These days, companies are rethinking what an office should be, and suddenly, comfort, well-being, and productivity sit at the heart of workplace design. That's where ergonomic luxury comes in.

This shift really kicked in after remote and hybrid work took over during the pandemic. Once everyone got a taste of working from home, the old idea of just providing a desk and a chair didn't cut it anymore. Now, offices have to do more; they need to help people feel good, work better together, and actually focus. Ergonomics has evolved from being something nice-to-have to what every forward-thinking company pays serious attention to.

Ergo, seating

Take height-adjustable desks, for example. Not so long ago, you'd only see these in fancy international offices. Now, they're popping up in Indian workspaces, too. These desks let people switch between sitting and standing, which helps fight off that sluggish feeling you get from sitting for too long. It's a small change, but it makes a real difference.

Chairs are getting an upgrade, too. Companies are pouring money into seating that actually supports people's backs and lets them adjust the armrests and lumbar support. Breathable fabrics and flexible features aren't just perks anymore – they are the new standard. Since most of us spend hours glued to our chairs, a good one isn't just about comfort; it's about health in the long run.

Office layouts are getting a shake-up as well. The days of fixed desks and rigid seating charts are fading. Now, you'll find all sorts of zones: quiet spaces for deep work, open areas for teamwork, lounges for a quick break, even private booths for calls. This kind of set-up gives people options.

It's all part of making the office more lively, less repetitive. People can start at a focus desk in the morning, huddle with their team in the afternoon, then take a private call later. Mixing things up like this helps keep both bodies and minds active.

GETTY IMAGES/ISTOCKPHOTO

Better quality

What's driving all this change? It's what the real-estate folks call a "flight to quality." Companies want better spaces, not just bigger ones. In cities like Bengaluru, Mumbai, and Delhi NCR, businesses are hunting for offices with big windows, fresh air, and smart layouts. Developers are catching on. New buildings come with wide corridors, high ceilings, and ergonomic features baked right in.

The right set-up cuts down on aches and pains, helps people concentrate, and makes it easier to work together. For companies trying to hire and keep great people, the quality of the office space now plays a huge role.

So, Indian offices are heading into a new era. Ergonomic luxury isn't just about feeling comfortable anymore, it's about creating places where people can do their best work and stay healthy. As businesses keep figuring out what the future of work looks like, smart, ergonomic design is here to stay.

The writer is regional managing director, north India of The Executive Centre.

In 2025, the Dubai real-estate market witnessed transactions worth AED 917 billion ($250 billion), making it one of the largest markets globally. Over the past few years, it has gained strength as more corporate offices from across Asia, Europe and Africa have chosen the city as their regional headquarters.

Tables turned

That confidence was shaken on February 28, 2026, when the city became collateral damage in the U.S.-Israel strikes on Iran. Iran retaliated by firing missiles and drones at the U.S. assets and allies across the Gulf, including the UAE.

The continuation of hostilities in West Asia and the constant threat of a missile or a drone flying in has raised a question mark on its “haven” status and rattled investors, fuelling speculations about an imminent downturn of Dubai’s real-estate market.

“We are seeing more enquiries from Dubai-based NRIs, and they are evaluating to buy a property back home and have a foot in India. Dubai is an extraordinary city; it will bounce back from this unprecedented situation. But people are now scared,” says Ashish Puravankara, managing director of Puravankara Projects Ltd, a 50-year-old Indian real-estate company in Bengaluru.

The company has many offices in West Asia, and earlier it used to get 150 to 200 enquiries every week, and this has gone up by 50-60 per cent, he says, adding that people who had made Dubai their primary home are now thinking of buying a home in India after the war broke out. How long this situation will continue is anyone’s guess.

“It’s too early to assess the situation, and no real-estate transaction might have happened since the war started in the region,” says Samir Jasuja, managing director and CEO of PropEquity, a real-estate data and analytics platform.

“But I believe it is a temporary blip. They [the local government] have been caught off guard; they have all the money and power to make their city safe and vibrant again,” he says.

The luxury segment is witnessing discounts of up to 15 per cent, while mid-income housing remains stable and mass housing in oversupplied areas has seen price softening of up to 6 per cent, according to analyst observations.

It is an existential issue for Dubai or the UAE. They would spend billions of dollars to secure their city, may have an Iron Dome system like that of Israel to safeguard their assets and residents.

For Dubai, wholesale and retail trade, transportation and logistics and financial services are its main contributors to GDP, followed by real-estate and tourism.

If the citizens, expatriates and businesses do not feel safe, all will go, and the monar-chies of the UAE would do everything at their command to regain that trust Dubai is known for and attract more people to make the emirates their primary home.

Dubai has a population of about four million (40 lakh), of whom 92 per cent are expatriates. Its rapid economic growth has been attracting businesspeople and professionals in tens of thousands. Besides being a major tourist destination and air-transport hub, it has a thriving economy.

The country will not survive if the local government cannot guarantee peace, security, stability and continuous economic reforms. According to analysts, it could spend trillions of dollars to achieve this, and money is no issue for such cash-rich jurisdictions. If the need be and for their own survival, they may even show the Americans the door and have plenty of money to buy security.

Role for investors

Anshuman Magazine, chairman and CEO of India, South-East Asia, Middle East & Africa, CBRE, believes that Dubai and India represent two of the most dynamic investment corridors globally, each serving a distinct strategic role for investors. He notes that “while current geopolitical developments in the wider region have temporarily led to a more observational stance by some investors, the underlying fundamentals of the hub remain structurally sound.”

“In 2025, we saw residential transactions in Dubai rising 31 per cent year-on-year to AED 395 billion ($107.5 billion), supported by robust infrastructure and a world-class regulatory framework that continues to attract international capital,” he says, adding, “So far in 2026, the residential sales are already ahead as compared to the same period in 2025, AED125 billion (US$34 billion) versus AED110 billion (US$30 billion).”

Indian market

At the same time, the Indian market is demonstrating immense depth. With institutional equity inflows in India reaching a record $14 billion in 2025, a trend of portfolio diversification is being seen rather than a shift away from any single region.

“Investors are thinking about India as a long-term strategic base, not just an alternative to somewhere else. The depth of its talent pool and a maturing regulatory environment now offer institutional investors genuine transparency and liquidity,” Magazine says.

For the global investors, these markets are being viewed as complementary: one offering a high-yield, international lifestyle gateway, and the other providing a high-growth, domestic consumption-led hedge.

Dubai-based developer Rizwan Sajjan, founder and chairman of Danube Group, believes that the city will soon overcome this crisis. “We have overcome crises before – from the 2008 financial downturn to COVID – and have emerged stronger each time. Resilience is embedded in Dubai’s DNA, and I am confident that our economy will continue to grow and thrive,” he says.

According to him, as for the real-estate market, at this stage the impact appears to be driven more by sentiment than by any fundamental structural shift. It would be premature to draw any long-term conclusions at this point.

Delay in purchases

Commenting on the current situation, Aakash Patel, director of Atul Projects, a Mumbai-based real-estate firm, says investor sentiment is cautious, with some buyers delaying purchases. With transaction volumes declining, developers are offering incentives such as flexible payment plans.

However, prices still remain firm, and with high-value transactions happening, it suggests a period of temporary pause and a wait-and-watch situation.

According to analysts, the ongoing situation might prompt global investors to consider alternative assets, which might be a great opportunity for the Indian real estate market, especially in cities with high demand for property, such as Mumbai and Gurugram.

Mumbai-based real-estate company Dhuleva Group’s director, Anuj Mehta, feels that due to the current global geopolitical climate, capital movement from Dubai will happen as investors would seek to balance risk versus return. “Both India and specific micro-markets such as south Mumbai will be considered more stable, offering both capital appreciation and protection of wealth over the long term,” he believes.

Analysts expect a mild correction, with prices likely to fall by about 7 per cent on average, and the downturn projected to continue until 2028.

Shekhar G. Patel, national president of real estate body Confederation of Real Estate Developers’ Association of India (CREDAI), believes that High Networth Individuals (HNIs) will now think twice before investing in Dubai.

“After the recent attacks, Dubai is not as before. Some people will take away capital. The incident will impact that market for the next two to three years. With the possibility of the proxy war to continue, many investors are likely to consider India as their investment destination, and this is for India’s advantage,” says Patel.

Dubai, controlled by a monarchy with vast financial resources and strong political will, will likely restore safety and stability quickly. However, the fear of the unknown – largely absent until now – may continue to haunt residents and create anxiety.

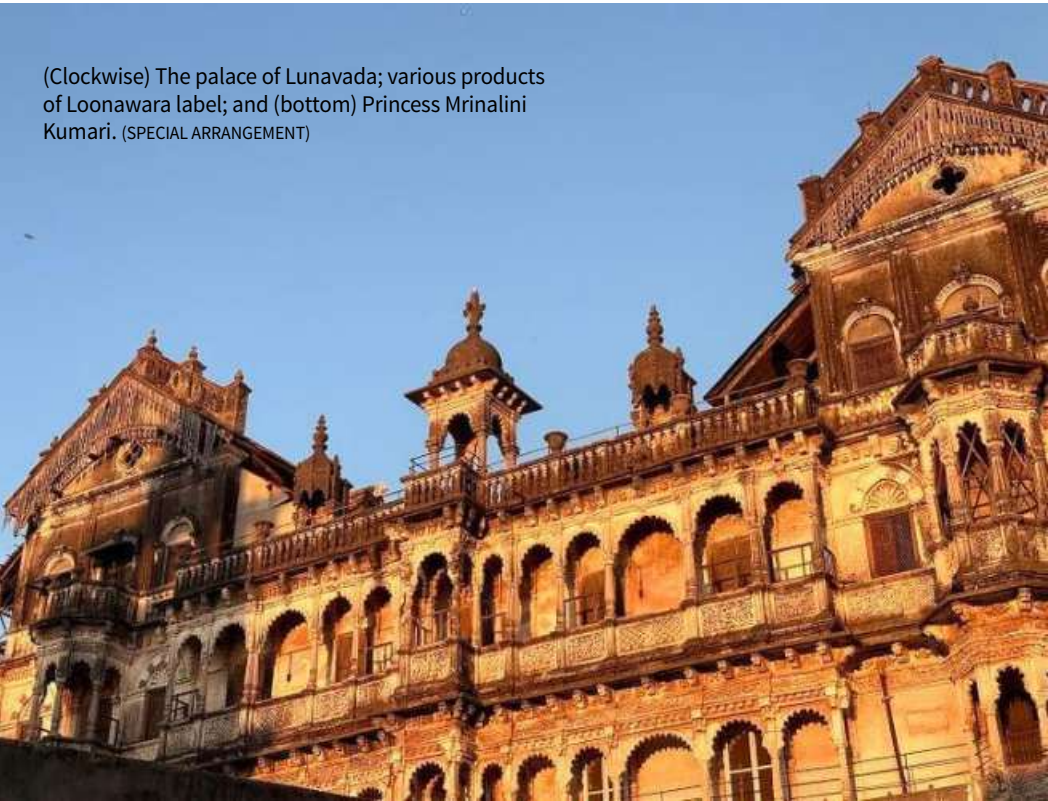

We are seeing more enquiries from Dubai-based NRIs, and they are evaluating to buy a property back home and have a foot in India.

Rashmi Gopal Rao

If you are someone who is inspired by vintage silhouettes, ornately crafted furniture, rich textures and intense colours and love to recreate a vibe straight out of a palace, Loonawara must be on your list. A home décor brand that takes cues from royalty and seamlessly reimagines centuries of art, history and heritage for contemporary living, Loonawara was born within the walls of Gujarat's Lunavada palace. An architectural masterpiece that dates to the 15th century, this one stands tall as a quiet reminder of the opulence and magnificence of the bygone era. Founded early in 2025, Loonawara is the brainchild of 29-year-old Princess Mrinalini Kumari. It offers a bespoke range of home furnishings and furniture, including cushions, table linens and lamp shades. Excerpts from a conversation with Princess Mrinalini Kumari of Lunavada:

Lunavada palace files

After a master's in furniture design from Florence, Gujarat princess Mrinalini Kumari brings label Loonawara, which blends royal memories, wildlife paintings and Mashru fabrics, into bespoke decor

Question: Tell us about the story behind Loonawara.
Answer: Design is something that I'm extremely passionate about. I have always been drawn towards designing spaces and products that tell stories. I finished my interior design degree from Navrachana University in Vadodara and then went on to finish my M.A. in furniture design from Florence, Italy. I am also an amateur artist and fond of painting. Apart from this, I love wildlife photography; it is a hobby my dad and I share. Loonawara brings together everything I love: design, heritage and the art of living beautifully. It was born from my deep love for wildlife, art and the royal heritage I have grown up surrounded by. The debut collection takes inspiration from wildlife photographs that my father and I have taken over the years. I have hand-painted the animals on paper and used them as motifs in my designs. At the same time, many elements draw from the Lunavada palace, our ancestral home that dates back over 600 years and carries with it a rich legacy tracing to the Chalukyas of Gujarat. For the uninitiated, the elder brother from this lineage moved and settled in Lunavada in around 1224 and began the construction of the current Raj Mahal Lunavada in around 1434. We currently still reside in the same palace; me being the 45th generation.

Q: So, how do the products of Loonawara reflect the vibe of palace living and royalty?

A: Palace living, to me, is about timeless elegance, a balance of grandeur and comfort. The designs draw from Lunavada palace's intricate carvings, old wall-paintings, fading murals and architectural motifs, all of which have been thoughtfully adapted for modern contexts. Our patterns, prints and palettes draw from these elements. I have focused on colour, texture, and materiality to evoke that resplendent feel; think rich tones and opulent textures. The palace has floral motifs painted on the walls and ceilings, and these have been used in our prints. Lustrous fabrics like Mashru as well as regal motifs carry a sense of history while still feeling fresh, classy and contemporary. In short, the brand is a reflection of my intrinsic association with nature, royalty and heritage.

Q: What material are your soft furnishings made of?

A: The main fabric we use is Mashru, which is a lustrous silk-cotton blend, handwoven in Kutch. Given its natural sheen and rich texture, it elevates the aesthetic of our colour-rich designs and lends a touch of luxury to each product. Mashru is also steeped in royal patronage and is a symbol of subtle sophistication, making it appropriate for our collection.

Q: How do you select the prints used on the table mats, cushions, and more?

A: Each print starts off as a painting, sometimes inspired by the wildlife which we have photographed or motifs from palace carvings, sculptures and murals. I select and rework this artwork for different formats so that every piece feels balanced in terms of scale, detail and emotion. The goal is for each product, whether a cushion or a table mat, to hold its own as a piece of art and at the same time blend seamlessly into a curated home. The products are designed to fit well into all kinds of décor styles while still standing out as a centre piece or a conversation starter.

Q: Tell us a bit about your range of furniture.

A: Having been raised in Lunavada meant that each piece of furniture and each corner of the palace had a story to tell. The furniture range is deeply personal, a reinterpretation of the pieces I have grown up living with. They reflect the proportions, craftsmanship, and detailing I have admired since childhood, but with a modern touch. My background in furniture design from Florence helped me marry old-world charm and modern sensibilities, resulting in timeless pieces that feel both rooted yet relevant.

Q: Are you supporting any artisanal craft(s) or handmade techniques in your products?

A: Indeed, Loonawara is all about design. The Mashru fabric, which we use for our prints, is handwoven by artisans in Kutch, and many of our textiles boast of hand-embellished or hand-finished detailing. The brand is built in collaboration with skilled craftspeople to bring traditional techniques into a modern design language to ensure that every product is reflective of authenticity, but with a human touch. Although we do use digital printing to interpret our designs, all the embroidery work and tailoring are done by skilled artisans.

Q: Why should one choose Loonawara for their home?

A: Loonawara is more than a brand, it is a continuation of stories that began centuries ago. It is about preserving a legacy while creating something meaningful and relevant today. Each piece is crafted with care, inspired by memories, and designed to bring in a touch of art, heritage, and soul into everyday living and modern homes. Loonawara stands apart for its authenticity, cultural depth, and enduring style. Choosing Loonawara is bringing home a piece of living history, reinterpreted through the lens of modern luxury and personal artistry.
