

metroPLUS

THE HINDU

History's several pluralities to be discussed at DakshinaChitra's Langfest P2

TAMANNAAH ON HER NEW JEWELLERY LINE P4

Steady as she goes Scenes from turtle walks in India. VELANKANNI RAJ B BISWARANJAN ROUT AND PRANIT HEMANTH

Volunteers walk for miles in search of fragile Olive Ridley turtle nests buried beneath the sand. A night patrol reveals a growing community determined to protect the species

Sangita Rajan
sangitarajan.pb@thehindu.co.in

It is lam on a rather warm February night. The stretches of Neelankarai beach merge with Thiruvanniyur beach. Fishing boats are stationed on the shore waiting for dawn. Bright lights from the city blind our vision. Sand in our shoes, salt in the air. Over 50 curious observers walk at a safe distance from the volunteers, letting them do their job: to find Olive Ridley turtle nests and collect the eggs for safekeeping.

The Olive Ridley sea turtle, a species classified as 'Vulnerable' by the International Union for Conservation of Nature, has nested along India's eastern coastline for centuries. Each year, between December and April, females return to shore, often at night, to lay eggs. Left buried in open sand, the nests are vulnerable to predators such as dogs. Volunteers therefore walk the length of the shore at night to retrieve the eggs and relocate them to protected hatcheries.

Approximately 30 minutes into the walk, a volunteer asks us to stay back. A cluster of volunteers form a loose circle, their torch beams crossing over a single patch of sand. From where we stand, it looks like nothing. No turtle, no visible sign of life. Fifteen minutes in the dark feels longer than it should. Then someone waves us forward.

V Arun from the Students Sea Turtle Conservation Network (SSTCN), a voluntary organisation that works with the Forest Department, is already on his knees, digging into the sand. A nest has been found. He starts retrieving soft shelled eggs that look fragile in a way that makes the entire beach feel suddenly hostile. One becomes five, five becomes 20, and eventually 82 eggs are pulled out of a 42cm deep nest. "Some days we find many nests, some days we find nothing at all. We suggest that observers come for the experience, because engagement with Nature is important. You may happen to see a nesting turtle, which is the ultimate reward on a walk like this, but it may not happen at all. Wildlife is not something you can predict," says Arun.

The scale of the effort extends far beyond one night's walk. According to a report in The Hindu, during the 2024-25 season, a total of 3,19,895 eggs were collected across Tamil Nadu. By April, 2,29,432 hatchlings had been released back into the sea. Cuddalore led with 81,622 hatchlings, followed by Mayiladuthurai with 38,582, and Chennai recorded 37,689 hatchlings.

But conservation along Chennai's coast is not driven by numbers alone. It is sustained by the Forest Department, volunteers, students, working professionals, and concerned citizens who give up their weekends to walk through the night. What began about five decades ago as a small volunteer effort has evolved into a quiet civic ritual. On any given patrol, first-timers walk alongside veterans who have been scanning these shores for years. Some return season after season. "Seeing it in person is very different from just reading about it," says Rozaline Sherly, a 21-year-old Law student from Bengaluru. "When you actually walk the stretch and see how they check for nests, and also see the dead turtles, it makes you more aware. If more people knew about this, there would be a more conscious effort to protect the environment." She adds that ground-level exposure adds weight to the laws they read about in classrooms.

Among the volunteers that night was Poornima, the head teacher of Marudam Farm School, Thiruvannamalai, who had brought along a group of 10 to 15 students. "The relationship with animals is very important for children. It is wildlife, and not something like a pet that is domesticated. That experience is important," she says.

On-ground realities
For Supraja Dharini of the Tree Foundation, a Chennai-based marine conservation organisation that works with fishing communities

How to join a turtle walk

Citizen turtle walks are conducted during the nesting season by multiple groups along the city's coastline. The Students Sea Turtle Conservation Network (SSTCN) organises late-night patrol walks every Friday and Saturday between Neelankarai and Besant Nagar during the January-March season. Details are available at www.sstcn.org. Meanwhile, Save a Turtle hosts scheduled turtle walks between January 20 and February 28 at Pattinambakkam between 12.30am and 2am. Dates are announced based on availability on Instagram at @saveaturtle.chennai. Participants are expected to follow strict guidelines: No flash photography, minimal noise, no interference with nesting turtles, and should be prepared for long walks on sand. Sightings are never guaranteed.

S Poorvaja
poorvaja.sundar@thehindu.co.in

Why don't more women participate in quizzes? This is a question that quizzers still struggle to crack. On March 8 however, things promise to be different. The Quiz Foundation of India (QFI) will be back with the second edition of the Purple Riband Quiz: a quiz by women, for women, and about women.

"Last year for International Women's Day, we announced a similar quiz by women quiz hosts. Given that it was the first edition, we said that the two-member teams can be all-women or mixed. Nearly 73 women showed up and we were thrilled. This year, the quiz is open only to women and we are excited to see the turnout," says Dr Navin Jayakumar, quizmaster, and ophthalmologist.

Back in 1987, Dr Navin and several other avid quizzers in Chennai including his mother Saranya Jayakumar went on to found QFI. Since then, the group continues to have fortnightly meetings and quizzes round the year.

"We are keen to increase the

Get quizzical

Ready to press the buzzer at Quiz Foundation of India's quiz hosted for women and by women?

participation of women in quizzing. While girls do show an interest in quizzing when in school, it seems to vanish soon after. At present, nearly 95% of participants in general quizzes are men. We are trying to understand what the hindrances are, and as a start, have worked on this quiz by and for women," Dr Navin says.

Women of any age can participate as a team of two members and if a participant does not have a team, they will be assigned a team member at the venue. QFI also promises live music, and invites all participants to share their thoughts and ideas on how to improve women's participation in quizzing.

Fastest first Jayashree Mohanka, Saranya Jayakumar and Nirupama V during the quiz last year. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

The highlight of the event this year are the four quiz hosts, all women and across ages. Saranya Jayakumar, Jayashree Mohanka, and Nirupama Venkatasubramanian, three avid quizzers who began their quizzing journeys in Chennai return this year as well, and will be joined by 13-year old Vanshi Mudaliar from Mumbai, famed for her singing.

"When I was younger, I would accompany my father to quizzes and I continue to go with him to the Bombay Quiz Club," says Vanshi, who adds that she is an enthusiastic learner. Currently also dabbling in quizzes at school, Vanshi says she is working on getting the questions ready for the quiz in Chennai, an exercise she immensely enjoys. "I wish I did see more women take to quizzing in general. This is a fun space for anybody curious about the world and through quizzes like the one I am going to be helping host, I hope things change with regard to participation," she says.

If anyone needed more convincing to make a beeline for the Purple Riband Quiz, Aparna Sriram, a Hindi tutor from Chennai who won the quiz last year with her teammate Savitri Murali promises that the quiz will be an engaging one.

"I grew up watching quiz shows at home and since college, have been an active member of QFI. Quizzing is definitely a very male dominated sport and many women are hesitant about the fact that it does not feel like a level playing field, and the fact that there are many constraints they face to be able to make it to meetings or to quizzes," she says.

"We now have an exclusive WhatsApp group for women quizzes here and there are online leagues that are seeing a steady increase in participation by women. Events like the Purple Riband Quiz will encourage more of them to come in as well," she adds.

The Purple Riband Quiz will be held on March 8 at RA Puram. The event is at 3pm. For more information, contact quizfoundation@gmail.com and visit www.quizfoundation.com to register.

Up in the lair

Delhi-based speakeasy Lair will take over The Leather Bar at The Park Chennai for a one-night edition of The Vibe Exchange, bringing one of India's most celebrated bar programmes to the city. Ranked eight among Asia's 50 Best Bars 2025, Lair is known for its minimalist aesthetic and narrative-driven, ingredient-focussed cocktails. For its Chennai showcase, beverages director Navjot Singh and team will present a menu inspired by animals and ecosystems, highlighting layered botanicals and regional influences. Among the highlights is Black Mamba, made with Dewar's White, dry fig and Prekese bark amaro, inspired by the West African ingredient traditionally used in soups and curries. Another example is Black Gold which blends Bacardi Ocho with black pepper, Lair spicy cordial and grapefruit, demonstrating how spice can be integrated into structured cocktail builds. The evening will feature guest bartenders Maria and Utkarsh from Lair, who will present the curated cocktail menu during the takeover. On February 28, 7.30pm onwards. For reservations, call 42676000.

Through its panel discussions and artistic performances, LangFest aims to discuss the several layers to history

Neha Sasi
neha.sasi@thehindu.co.in

Roti, can I?

Choose from rojak, pai tee, flaky roti canai, nasi lemak and kaya at Penang, Chennai's newest Malaysian restraurant

S Poorvaja
poorvaja.sundar@thehindu.co.in

K hader Nawaz Khan Road, with its spanking new paver blocks and neat rows of streetlights is not the only thing to have transformed following a makeover. Crystal Woo Dimsum House, which threw open its doors in 2024, is now Penang, with cheery papered walls, a large, spacious dining area and an open kitchen where you can sneak a peek at flaky roti canai being made.

“Penang is quite close to my heart; it is a city that promises a one-of-a-kind experience if you are a foodie. You can find anything and everything there,” says Dhasha Sendhil, owner. Growing up in a Malaysian household, Dhasha says meals involved a coming together of three food cultures; Malay, Indian, and Chinese.

“There would be an Indian curry, or Chinese-style vegetables and a Malaysian curry or sambal on the side as well. I have always been passionate about the food of my roots, and was keen to replicate that experience here,” she adds. When it was time for a rebrand of Crystal Woo, Dhasha says she knew the time was right.

Penang’s menu is a mix of Malaysian and Chinese dishes, with some Thai staples. We begin with some old favourites from Crystal Woo, the prawn toast which has a crunchy bread exterior coated with sesame and filled with juicy prawn, and a selection of the dimsum. The truffle mushroom dimsum that comes with a creamy emadatshi sauce is a delicious, bite-sized start to the meal. We then sample some satay; and while the chicken and the tofu satay are flavourful and juicy, both could use less salt. While the chilli mushroom starter feels like a familiar comfort Chinese appetiser, the rojak has us more excited. Dhasha says that the recipe Penang has, is from her mother, a chef and restaurateur who runs a Malaysian restaurant in the UK.

The rojak here is served as fried dough balls that are savoury with a sweet and spicy red sauce; flavours that come together well. Another Malaysian classic that makes for a perfect bite-sized appetiser is the pai tee, crisp pastry shells filled with a chicken and vegetable mince.

Platter perfect (Clockwise from far left) Murtabak, kaya toast and nasi lemak. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

While loaded trays of nasi lemak, steaming hot rice with chicken, vegetables and sambal head to the other tables, we pick from the selection of Malaysian roti and curries. The soft, flaky roti canai with the kari ayam or chicken curry scores high here. While the murtabak or stuffed roti is soft and juicy, it could have done with a little more flavour.

Penang’s extensive menu has a good balance of quick, comfort options and dishes for more slower, more elaborate meals. There is a maggie goreng, a Pattaya-style nasi goreng, a claypot curry maggie, Thai curries, as well as chicken wings and radish cakes.

While there are boba teas, iced teas and house special mocktails to pick from, the dessert menu is where the excitement is. “The kaya is made from scratch here and something we are thrilled to have people try,” Dhasha says. While they are already serving a kaya toast, the menu also features a kaya creme brulee, with other Malaysian staples like the apam balik, a sweet pancake stuffed with a sweet, buttery peanut and corn filling.

Penang by Crystal Woo is located at 9, Oyster building, KNK Road and is open for lunch and dinner. A meal for two costs ₹1,500.

Spice, spice baby

Pep Asia's new dine-in restaurant provides a solid bite for the buck

Sangita Rajan
sangitarajan.pb@thehindu.co.in

T okyo has the highest density of restaurants per capita in the world. It is a city shaped by an almost feverish devotion to food, where dining is less an occasion and more a daily ritual. In Chennai, Anna Nagar comes closest to that restless energy. Cafés, kiosks and hole-in-the-wall kitchens crowd its lanes, making a persuasive case for leaving your stove untouched.

This week's discovery in the bylanes of Anna Nagar East is Pep Asia. Tucked inside a café within a residential colony off the main road, it carries the hush of a speakeasy.

“We began as a cloud kitchen in T Nagar during the pandemic,” says Dennis Kumar, co-partner and owner, Pep Asia. “Last year, we took over Shack in Anna Nagar. When we acquired the space behind it, reopening Pep Asia as a dine-in restaurant felt like the natural next step.”

Complete with a hibachi grill, the 26-seater space presents an expansive menu curated by head chef and co-partner Aravind Raja. “I understand the city’s appetite and palate, so putting this menu together wasn’t difficult,” he says. He has previously worked at Golden Dragon at Taj Coromandel, China XO at The Leela Palace, and later served as corporate chef at Nasi and Mee.

We begin with a fragrant Thai coconut milk soup, perfumed with kaffir lime leaves, fresh ginger, basil and a measured hit of chillies. It wakes up the palate without overwhelming it. It pairs well with the punchy jumbo lotus stem. Unlike the thin Indian lotus stem often served crisp, these thicker slices are lightly fried while retaining a fresh, almost juicy bite.

The Japanese silken tofu and avocado salad, with a wasabi dressing, is sharp and the kind of clean, bright freshness that feels tailor-made for a Chennai summer. In contrast, the Vietnamese chicken salad arrives more robust, layered with roasted peanuts, fried onions and fresh herbs. It is substantial enough to stand in as a meal on its own.

Whatever else you choose to revisit later, the in-house signature seafood menu demands attention. The tiger prawns, tossed in superior XO sauce, are deeply savoury and expertly balanced. The flesh remains juicy and tender, a detail that speaks as much to sourcing as it does to technique.

Dennis is a seafood supplier and exporter, and the founder of Oyster Reef, a sustainable seafood sourcing platform that supplies several hotels across Chennai and beyond. The quality on the plate reflects that proximity to the source.

For the main couse, we skip past the Thai curries, laksa, pad Thai, and many renditions of ramen and fried rice, and try the Malaysian mee hoon goreng, a vermicelli style spicy noodles done in a classic hawker's style.

More often than not, a massive menu at a small restaurant is a recipe for disaster, but here, the sprawl feels considered rather than chaotic. The kitchen knows where its strengths lie and is not afraid to keep turning out dishes that are bold, spicy and punchy. “It is a large menu, but we’ll keep changing things. We’re adding sushi next week,” says Aravind, laughing.

Pep Asia is at C-24/2, 6th Street, Ward 101, Anna Nagar East. A meal for two costs between ₹600 and ₹800.

Seaside story

At Rasanai, dishes inspired by thattukadais in Tamil Nadu's rural heartland meet a breezy Besant Nagar beachfront setting

Chitradeepa Anantharam chitradeepa.a@thehindu.co.in

I t is rare to come across a restaurant where, even as you are savoring your meal, you find yourself planning a return to try the rest of the menu.

Located on the Besant Nagar beachfront, Rasanai offers alfresco dining with sweeping views of the sea, along with air-conditioned indoor seating.

The décor highlights Tamil Nadu, with roof decorations made of glass bangles, lamp shades crafted from palm leaves, and kolam motifs and drishti face masks adorning the space.

The menu has been curated by the founder, Vikram Mohan, chairman, Pricol Group.

“Having travelled extensively across Tamil Nadu, especially through its rural heartlands, I have encountered seasoned masters who create exceptional dishes in small messes and thattukadais. Their skill amazed me, and I normally invite them to demonstrate their cooking,” he says.

We begin our lunch with thengapaal rasam, a Kongu speciality that is soothing, comforting, and mildly spicy. The soup draws its delicate flavour from coconut milk and coconut oil. The thogayal omelette (coconut thogayal is whipped along with eggs, minced onions, and slow-cooked on a greased cast iron ladle) does not disappoint.

As we wait for the Kodi pesaru ponagalu and Kovai paneer Monica to arrive, Vikram ushers in Trivandrum fried chicken and venad paal konju. Developed from a street-vendor recipe, the fried chicken is a constant at toddy shops across Kerala and is therefore unapologetically spicy, explains Vikram. In contrast, the paal konju is gentle and comforting.

A popular dish from Andhra Pradesh, Kodi pesaru ponagalu – similar to Tamil Nadu’s paniyaram – is made from a batter of moong dal and urad dal, stuffed with mildly spiced minced chicken, and served with a flavourful chutney on the side.

“Some of the popular street foods are presented in a relatable avatar to get the attention of millennials,” says Vikram.

Culinary storytelling (From far left) At Rasanai; and kal appam with milagu kozhi tacos. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

We taste the kal appam with milagu kozhi taco. The thick appam, folded like a taco, is filled with chicken and sprinkled with coriander leaves.

A regional speciality from the Ramanathapuram district, the Rameshwaram pottalam sadham features seeraga samba rice cooked in coconut milk to a creamy consistency. Accompaniments include mutton chukka, fried chicken chunks, a boiled egg, salna, and a tangy mango pickle. Everything is assembled, wrapped in a banana leaf, and grilled on a hot tawa to allow the flavours to intensify.

We round off our lunch with banana appe and vettilai shots. The dessert pairs a sweet paniyaram made from ripe banana, wheat flour, and jaggery with a fragrant infusion of coconut milk and betel leaf. We bite into the warm appe and wash it down with the vettilai infusion – a playful finale.

Rasanai, Besant Nagar is open for lunch and dinner. Meal for two costs ₹2,000. For reservations, call 8925915856.

A new culture of “decoding” films is emerging among cinephiles who look through a lens of craft and intention

Hidden meanings Srinath and Srikanth Ranganathan, and Madhan.
SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

Lithanchan V

Kodaikanal-based Madhan is an Engineering graduate and a cinephile. He speaks of cinema the way some people speak of faith. “I’ve always been a cinephile. Not in the sense of following only a particular cinema or industry... I genuinely love cinema as a whole,” he says.

From childhood, Madhan was drawn not to the glamour of the screen but to the layers behind it. "And that's how the whole decoding of films started," says Madhan, who is popularly known by his handle Man with ADHD on social media.

The turning point arrived with his video on Vada Chennai. "In 12-13 hours, it crossed a million views." In it, he reinterpreted the "funk scene," where Dhannush is detained by police for his hairstyle. He linked it to the tense atmosphere following the assassination of Rajiv Gandhi, suggesting police across neighbourhoods like Royapuram would begin profiling young men who matched a certain look. This fresh perspective went viral, and Vetri Maaran later referenced it at an event, bringing him recognition from media houses, meme pages, and members of the director's own team.

From thereon, with every video, he built a growing community of people who are curious to look at cinema with a deeper lens. "Hollywood has massive decoding communities for Game of Thrones, Marvel, and DC. I wanted to create a similar space for Tamil cinema," he says.

If Madhan represents the curious viewer, brothers Srinath and Srikanth Ranganathan bridge the world between audience and filmmaker through their YouTube channel, Expert Fx. “Cinema is a craft,” says

Srikanth. "When a filmmaker uses that craft to translate what's in their mind onto the screen, it deserves to be approached more scientifically and technically than mere decoding or random theories.” He adds that their background in Visual Communication shaped the way they watch movies. To them, storytelling is an ancient practice as old as temple sculptures, always built on meaning and symbolism that carries knowledge from one generation to the next.

A breakthrough moment for the brothers came when cinematographer Manoj Paramahansa collaborated with them after noticing their work online. Manoj spent three-and-a-half hours breaking down scenes with them, not for publicity, but because he believed in the importance of nurturing young creators who respect cinema as an art form. For Srinath and Srikanth, that moment felt like validation.

Meanwhile, speaking about the rise of decoding culture, filmmaker Ranjit Jeyakodi says, “The rise of movie decoding and fan theory culture in South Indian cinema has been even more explosive, fuelled by our massive star worship, dedicated fan clubs, and the boom of social media.”

Ranjit, best known for helming films such as Ispace and Rajavum Idhaya Ranivum and Michael, also mentions that when audiences read meanings into the film, it shows they are deeply invested. “That’s beautiful. But sometimes these misinterpretations dominate over the film’s real intent, and that can overshadow what the filmmaker worked hard to convey.”

He acknowledges that the fan theories, especially in South Indian cinema's star-driven culture, can turn into hype, and when reality does not match speculation, backlash often follows. "Come with curiosity, not expectations," Ranjit hopes core emotions never get lost in the noise. "Not every story needed to be a riddle. Sometimes a filmmaker just wants to say something heartfelt and simple."

Actor Tamannaah Bhatia speaks about completing 20 years and what it is like to turn entrepreneur with her new jewellery line

Priyadarshini Paitandy
priyadarshini.p@thehindu.co.in

This is a landmark year for Tamannaah Bhatia – the pan-Indian star completes 20 years in Kollywood and has an interesting slate of films coming up. “I just shot for Rohit Shetty’s Rakesh Maria with John Abraham. Then there is Rangers, an action adventure film – a Luv Ranjan production; and Vam with Sidharth Malhotra. It's rooted in some folklore, depicting culture in an interesting way," she lists out. Post this she will start her schedule for Purushan with Vishal, Ragini 3, and Shantaram. Meanwhile, Tamannaah has found time to embrace one of her passions. The actor recently launched Tamannaah Fine Jewellery in Mumbai (available at the retail store and online). This is jewellery – rings, necklaces, pendants, earrings, bracelets – in 14kt and 18kt gold with diamonds and gemstones like emerald, ruby, and tourmaline.

"It took two years to come up with the first drop, which has five collections," says Tamannaah. And keeping the month of love in mind, the brand just dropped Heart Knot, pieces that prominently feature diamond hearts. "The first most impactful piece I came up with and felt like we were onto something was the half and half torque necklace, inspired by the Indian hasli. The torque is like a metallic pipe and we attached it with links. We created our own links, called flick and that plays out a lot in our collections," she explains.

As a child, when Tamannaah had a bad day her father would take her to a jewellery store. She would buy trinkets. That perhaps is one of her earliest memories of jewellery. "I started working very young (she was 15 when she acted in her first film Chand Sa Roshan Chehra), so I was exposed to fashion early. I was getting ready everyday wearing jewellery. But I never imagined that I would take a liking to it so strong that I would create within that space," she says. A collection for men is on the cards next.

While styling herself for event and just “having glam on all the time”, she realised that there was too much emphasis on clothes and accessories that were not comfortable, and there was a certain notion of what glamour should be. But when she tried on certain kinds of jewellery, it took her away from that notion that others had. She wanted to create jewellery that could be worn every day and not just be locked away for weddings and other such occasions.

"My father has been in the jewellery business for the last 15 years. The moment I felt I had something to say in this space, I hopped in," says Tamannaah.

The actor has taken lessons she has learnt in the film industry and applied them to her jewellery business as well. "I've been in a commercial space and understand that in the end, your art is supposed to be consumed by people. If you have to survive as an artist, you have to reinvent." What's been interesting for her is that every year she discovers a new version of herself. Baahubali helped her realise the range and variety she could bring as an actor. She enjoys the ability to make her audience feel something. The whole purpose of entertainment she believes, is to influence people by invoking something within them.

But acting is also a physically rigorous job, she admits. "It is gruelling. You have to keep your body and emotions intact. There is very little time for family and self. In the end, would I do it all again?" she asks and after a pause smiles, "Yes, I would."

Kamal Haasan's next projects include reunions with Rajinikanth and Amitabh Bachchan

It's the season for grand reunions. And Kamal Haasan is at the centre of it all.

In what is probably the biggest news of the year for Tamil cinema, it was recently announced that Kamal is coming together for a project with Rajinikanth. Directed by Nelson and with music by Anirudh, the upcoming film marks a reunion between Rajinikanth and Haasan after 46 years, something that has gotten many fans excited.

Meanwhile, Kamal had another reunion recently: with veteran Bollywood star Amitabh Bachchan, with whom he will shoot for Kalki 2, the sequel to the hit Kalki 2898 AD. Photos that were recently released feature Amitabh in the costume of his character Ashvatthama, meeting Tamil superstar Kamal Haasan, who plays the antagonist Supreme Yaskin in the Kalki universe.

Directed by Nag Ashwin and headlined by Prabhas, the 2024 film attempted an unusual meeting point of the past and the future by blending stories from the Mahabharata with a futuristic science fiction world.

Though Kamal and Amitabh were part of the first Kalki film, it didn't feature them together. This upcoming sequel will have Amitabh and Kamal together on screen after 39 years. The stalwarts were last seen together in the 1985 film Geraftaar, which, interestingly, also featured Rajinikanth.

Who is Diana?

Remember the popular line 'Anbe Diana', associated with legendary comedian Goundamani? That is now a film title – of an upcoming Tamil movie starring Jama fame Pari Elavazhagan and Ramya Ranganathan, the first look of which was recently released. Touted to be a family entertainer, the film – written and directed by Pari – also has Roja making a comeback in a full-length role. The film also stars Chethan, 'Parithabangal' Gopi and Ismath Banu, and has music by Bharath Shankar. Shot majorly in Perambur, the film is aiming for a summer release.

IndianOil

ALL WOMEN CAR RALLY 2026

THE DUCHESS CLUB

Sunday, 8th March, 8am

SAVERA HOTEL

Entry Fee Rs.2000/-

(Inclusive of Lunch for 4)

Registration : 9841288631 / 9710947355

<https://forms.gle/a2nHS4ejHfScF8r7>

World of Women... Over the years!

|                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Co-Sponsor  kauveryhospital | Prize Sponsor  HEALTH STUDIO | Organised by  A.CUT ABOVEFOR AND BEYOND YOUR "I" &amp; "E" | Organised by  fmsci |
| Hospitality  SAVERA              |                                                                                                                                               | Hospitality  SAVERA                                             |                                                                                                                                      |

146, Dr.Radhakrishnan Salai, Mylapore, Chennai - 600 004