When bathrooms get personal

From expressive finishes to smart technology, Indian washrooms are becoming more than functional spaces

K.S. Swati

For a while now, the bathroom has been more than just a functional space in the home. As tastes and lifestyles evolve, homeowners are paying greater attention to creating bathrooms that reflect their personality and sense of design.

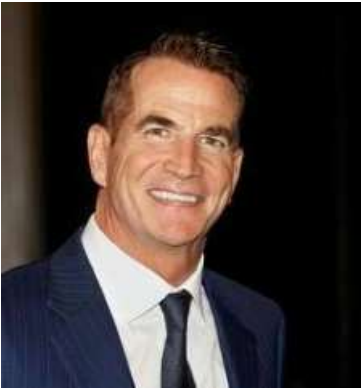

Vibrant colours, warm metallics such as gold and bronze, wooden accessories, natural stones, hand-crafted elements and 3D textures are making their way into washrooms, alongside smart toilets, digital showers and wellness-led features. As the bathroom becomes more personalised, brands are into concierge service. For instance, Kohler is looking to simplify the buying process through Concierge, its AI-powered, 24/7 digital assistant on WhatsApp, which helps consumers explore products and design ideas, and connect with the brand's experts.

CEO David Kohler, who was in the country recently, weighs in on the charm of metallic finish and the evergreen love for bathtubs. Edited excerpts from an interview:

Question: What is changing inside the bathroom, and what does this tell you about how Indians are beginning to think about the home?

Answer: A lot is changing in the bathroom. Technology is one of the big shifts. Smart toilets are becoming much more the norm in many countries around the world and are fast-growing here in India. Digital showering is another important trend because of the functionality, personalisation and convenience it can bring.

Wellness is also a strong trend. How do you bring a spa experience into your home with steam, sauna, cold showering and other experiences? Sustainability is important too. People want to live more sustainably, but without compromising the functionality and experience of the product.

berry, for the Indian consumer and their tastes. It is a combination of colour, texture and form.

Q: Kallista is Kohler's luxury brand. What does Kallista offer that differentiates it from the core Kohler proposition?

A: Consumers deserve choice. Indian consumers want the best brands in the world and the best technologies in the world. Kallista is about handcrafted products using the most precious and unique materials and finishes, from glass and crystal to different metals and ceramic inlays. These are exquisite, handcrafted products that are almost pieces of art for the home.

You want to live in a space that reflects your taste and makes you feel comfortable, makes you feel at home. Indian consumers also entertain and bring people into their homes. Spaces such as the powder room, which might be more guest-facing, can become an expression of design and taste. It is a showcase for others, but also an important space for themselves.

Gold has always had her name on it, land rarely does. As Chennai's property market grows, more women are asking to own it, not just fund it.

What's in a deed? For Indian women, everything

Siddhi Nawar

There's a framed photograph in a lot of Mylapore and Mandaveli homes. The one taken outside the new flat, everyone squeezed in, Amma usually holding the keys because someone thought it made for a nice picture. She held the keys that day, but she seldom held the deed.

That photograph is the honest starting point for this piece, more honest than any proverb about savings or any statistic. The woman who ran the house, stretched the salary, and probably decided which layout in Tambaram or which flat off GST Road the family could afford is very rarely the name typed on the sale document. Anyone who's watched a mother manage a household on one income already knows she can handle money. The real question is whether she's ever handed ownership of what that money eventually buys.

We are, after all, a city obsessed with gold and land. A Chennai wedding isn't complete without both being discussed at length: sovereigns for the bride, and somewhere in the background, a quiet conversation about a "site" for the groom's family. Property here isn't just an asset. It's practically a member of the family, discussed over filter coffee, argued about at temple functions, passed down with more sentiment than a will usually captures.

And yet national data tells us barely 13 percent of Indian women own a house entirely in their own name. Land ownership is thinner still. Some researchers now believe the real figure, once you strip out proxy reporting by "the man of the house," may be in the single digits. Chennai isn't immune to this. Plenty of women here have signed off on a home loan EMI transfer from their own salary account for twenty years, without their name ever making it onto the parent document.

But something is shifting, slowly, the way Chennai traffic shifts when the signal finally turns green. Across the city, and especially along the OMR and GST Road corridors where the IT crowd has driven a housing boom, more women are walking into registrar offices as buyers, not just witnesses. Mumbai's numbers, tracked by Knight Frank India, show women led home registrations climbing sharply in the last year, and real estate brokers in Chennai will tell you, off the record, that they're seeing the same pattern here, particularly among working women buying their first flat before marriage, not after.

You don't need to buy an apartment in Alwarpet to start. Some of the most sensible advice going around now is far humbler. Understand what a home loan actually costs you over its tenure. Ask what "joint ownership" means for inheritance. Register even a small ancestral plot in your name if it's owed to you. Tamil Nadu, like several states, offers a lower stamp duty for property registered in a woman's name, a small bureaucratic nudge that's easy to miss and worth using. For those who aren't ready to buy a flat, REITs and fractional ownership platforms now offer a way into real estate without needing lakhs in a bank locker.

None of this needs to happen all at once. It can start at the dinner table, with a daughter asking her father why the flat in Besant Nagar was never put in her mother's name, and getting an honest answer instead of a shrug. Because owning property in Chennai has never really been about the flat or the plot. It's about whether your name gets to sit at the top of a document that outlives you, instead of just your signature at the bottom, agreeing to someone else's decision.

10 PROJECTS, 10 DAYS, 10 DISTRICTS: SAMEERA GROUP

Chennai-based Sameera Group has announced its "10 Projects in 10 Days across 10 Districts" programme, a first-of-its-kind initiative by a real estate developer in Tamil Nadu. The company will launch 10 residential projects across the State between August 23 and September 1, 2026, comprising a mix of plotted developments and villas. The Rs. 300-crore initiative will mark a significant expansion of Sameera Group's footprint across key growth markets in Tamil Nadu.

The new projects will come up across Trichy, Madurai, Tirunelveli, Vellore, Ranipet, Kanchipuram, Chennai, Krishnagiri, Tiruvannamalai and Chengalpattu. The portfolio includes Vasuki Nagar, Sameera Pavillion, New Vision Township P-9, Sameera Prime and Sameera Floren-za Phase-I, among other developments being introduced as part of the 10-day launch programme. Each project is planned across approximately 10 acres, with around 200 units and plot sizes starting from approximately 800 sq. ft. The developments will offer a mix of residential plots and villas, along with features such as gated access, entrance arches, parks and other community amenities.

Commenting on the initiative, Mr. Jayakumar Murugesan, Managing Director, Sameera Groups, said, "With an investment of approximately Rs. 300 crores, we are simultaneously expanding into several important growth markets across Tamil Nadu." Mr. M. Sandeep Kumar, Managing Director, Sameera Groups, said, "The projects will offer a mix of plotted developments and villas, supported by gated environments, parks and other community infrastructure." Mr. D. Senthil Velan, CEO, Pan India Operations, Sameera Groups, said, "Our objective is to take the experience and development capabilities we have built here to new markets across India."

Aavush Puri

Last year, roughly one in five homes sold in Dubai was bought by an Indian. As a nation, we make up 22% of the homebuyers in the emirate - more than the Britishers (17%) and far more than the Chinese (14%). Indian traders, families and firms have been part of this city's commercial life for generations. We are integral to Dubai's success, and Dubai has continued to deliver for us. In the last week of March, at the height of media hysteria about capital fleeing the Middle East, Dubai homebuyers, many of them Indian, put down $2.7 billion, about ₹26,058 crore. The latest research into the Dubai property market shows it was the strongest week of the quarter.

More surprising still, three-quarters of those homes had not yet been built. Since March, between 72% and 77% of purchases were off-plan, meaning buyers will likely wait until around 2029 to collect their keys. Why make a four-year bet on a city everyone said is in trouble?

Panic in a market is like stirring a glass of water from the river. It shakes up the sediment so much that you can't see through it. But let it settle, and you realise

Betting on Dubai

Why Indian investors are looking beyond the panic and betting on the emirate's resilience nothing has changed. The water is the same. Shrewd investment is being able to see through the gloom.

This spring, the gap between hysteria and hard facts was stark. Shares in Dubai-listed developers fell 34%. Once the situation settled, however, our research shows actual home prices had only fallen between 4% and 7%. Investors understandably took a beat, with enquiries down 40% in the days after the escalation, but the market held. Sales from January to March reached roughly $37 billion (₹3.5 lakh crore) and were 19% higher than the same period a year earlier. For the year, till June, transactions are slightly behind the record set in 2025, but comfortably 15% ahead of 2024.

Knowledge of the city

Those who predicted a crash in Dubai don't understand this city. They still imagine a fragile boomtown with a dramatic skyline, rather than a sophisticated, diversified, and resilient market. Around 8 in 10 Dubai homes are bought without a mortgage, so if sentiment wavers, very few buyers face margin calls or forced sales. Buyers arrive from more than 150 countries, and 1,29,600 people bought here for the first time last year, up 23%. A base that broad absorbs panic among any one nationality. It is no secret that Dubai's success owes a great deal to India. An estimated 2 million Indians live and work here - the city's largest expatriate community by some distance. The attraction is not hard to explain: the dirham is pegged to the dollar, so as the rupee drifts, a Dubai property quietly doubles as a currency hedge. Meanwhile, gross rental returns run at about 6.8% a year, before service charges. There is also no income tax, no capital gains tax and no property tax.

New hope

For Indian entrepreneurs, the appeal reaches beyond simply bricks and mortar. Dubai International Financial Centre (DIFC) has now passed 10,000 active registered firms for the first time, after a 30% rise in registrations over the past year. Even in the first quarter, as the conflict reached its peak, 775 firms joined DIFC, with roughly a third establishing a regional presence in March. Dubai is not only a place to park capital, but a city to build companies, raise money and serve the wider region. In free zones such as DIFC, firms can also retain 100% foreign ownership, giving founders control without needing to surrender equity to a local partner.

In February, the door for Indian investors opened wider. The UAE's 10-year Golden Visa has long required property worth AED 2 million, roughly ₹5.2 crore, to qualify. Under updated rules, a mortgaged home now also meets the threshold, bringing an estimated 40% to 50% more buyers within reach of residency. For the Indian business owner who has run these numbers before and found themselves short, the Dubai dream may well be in reach.

That's not to say that investing in the city is foolproof. Dubai, like any large market, is not a monolith. Jumeirah Village Circle (JVC) and Jumeirah Village Triangle, two of the most heavily advertised addresses to Indian buyers, are the only areas we expect to fall this year, by around 3%. A lot of new properties are being built there and prices have not yet adjusted to that supply. Nevertheless, our central forecast for 2026 is residential property price growth of 4% to 7%. This is what a market looks like when it matures.

For a few weeks this spring, the water was too cloudy to see through. Dubai's fundamentals, however, have not changed. Indians have been building in Dubai for a long time, and the city endures as a great place to build, invest, and raise a family.

The kitchen is often seen as the beating heart of the home, a place for gathering, sharing and creating memories by the fire. As urban Indians move to compact homes, modular kitchen setups have become popular, with a plethora of foreign and Indian brands entering the kitchen market: Godrej Interio, Sleek by Asian Paints, and Livspace, while imported alternatives include German and Italian legacy brands like Häcker Kitchens and Veneta Cuisine.

As per a Mordor Intelligence Report in 2026, the Indian modular kitchen market size is expected to increase from ₹6,266 crore in 2025 to ₹7,615.6 crore in 2026 and approximately ₹20,051.2 crore by 2031, growing at a robust compounded annual growth rate of 21.16% over five years – with rising disposable income across Tier2 and Tier 3 cities and an increase in average spend on kitchen interiors across middle class homes.

As urbanisation compresses living spaces, modular solutions optimise every square foot while maintaining aesthetic appeal. Apartments in Tier 1 and Tier 2 cities typically encompass 1,500-2,000 square feet with compact open kitchens and an adjacent balcony space used for laundry units. Given kitchens have to optimally utilise every square inch of counter space for appliances and storage up to the ceiling, modular storage solutions offer flexibility and cost efficiency.

In terms of compliance, India's modular kitchen market has BIS storage-unit certification under IS 17634:2022 moving to full enforcement over the course of 2026. This is proof that the unit has passed tests for tipping over, drawer strength, and structural load capacity, and made of materials that are durable and safe for everyday home use.

New Indian kitchen

From Moroccan tiles to appliance garages, custom kitchens are finding room for personality and practicality

Digital configurations (online 3D visualisation and software tools that let designers customise layouts, finishes, and storage in real time) bridge physical retail gaps, allowing remote shoppers in Tier-2 and Tier-3 cities to design and plan their kitchens before manufacturing.

In conversation with Shreyans Bohra, Founder, Artiform, an interior design studio in Chennai. Edited excerpts:

Question: Why do customised kitchens score over regular cookie cutter modular kitchens in the market?

Answer: While modular solutions are popular, interior stylists design kitchen solutions keeping in mind the aesthetic and functionality. In terms of design, fluted wood on the inside of a cabinet or lacquered back panels with glass on the front are popular for cabinetry. In terms of core materials, high density high moisture resistance boards (HDHMR) offer termite and water proof versatility. In high humidity areas like Chennai, a special D3 glue (a professional-grade, water-resistant polyvinyl alcohol adhesive ideal for kitchen and bath-

Benefits of modular kitchens over traditional ones

- Space and storage: Pull-out trays, corner units, and tall units use every inch
- Better flow: Follows the work triangle rule for an easy cooking path. The three main work areas — sink, stove, and refrigerator — are connected in a triangle design. This format keeps the distance between these spaces short and clear
- No clutter: Built-in organisers keep counters clean. Appliance garages save counter space
- Factory precision: Machine-cut and finished parts offer strict quality control
- Faster setup: Pre-made modules take minimal time to assemble compared to carpenter work
- Portability: You can easily disassemble, move, and reinstall modular units if you relocate room cabinets, it offers bonding strength, sets quickly, and dries to a transparent or natural wood finish) is also used with cold press machines, so that the materials remain firmly tethered without bending. Especially in places along the coastline, it ensures strong cabinets that do not sag or warp during monsoon.

Q: What level of customisation can be provided within a kitchen, keeping in mind electrical and safety codes?

A: In terms of material for the platform or island tops, granite or quartz provides the most durability. Based on the interiors, we recommend a darker colour for easy maintenance. For homeowners with both a dry (smoke-free, sans daily cooking) and wet (daily cooking) kitchen, granite for the wet kitchen and ceramic stones for the dry kitchen/ breakfast bar are ideal. Ceramic is more delicate but comes in pastel colours suited to the breakfast/coffee area and is more aesthetically pleasing. For cabinetry, it's important to consider ease of maintenance and whether parts can be swapped or easily replaced. For low maintenance, we recommend lacquered or glass shutters, or even acrylic surfaces with soft-close doors and drawers. For those who want their small appliances like mixers and grinders out of sight, you can set up an appliance garage with plug points on the wall. A pocket door allows you to open and pull the appliance out on a rolling platform, use it and then push it back into the recessed garage. In terms of customisation of cabinet doors, you can have opening shutters, oblique doors that open and go above the cabinet, vertical doors or the Ribalta flip-up door. There are digitally printed glass panes that allow artwork to adorn the cabinet as well. We offer traditional carving on wooden cabinetry for those who want a traditional exterior and a modular interior. For these, mango and oak wood shutters are the best material.

Q: What are customers looking for in terms of complete customisation?

A: Some people love traditional kitchens while others want an international feel. On the East Coast Road in Chennai, a family was bored with looking at straight lines, so they opted for a Moroccan kitchen. This style prioritises tiles in geometric designs and jewel tones, terracotta, raw timber, stone counter-tops, and smooth plaster walls. We have printed an image of the Shore Temple, Mamallapuram, on the reverse of a glass shutter to adorn a home as well. Designer fabric from Sabyasachi has been integrated into the shutter with glass for protection. In terms of hobs, a combination of a built-in induction and a single burner hob works best. You can swap a microwave and use a warmer drawer instead (a 30 cm deep drawer that keeps hot food warm instead of reheating individual plates). Fixed islands are immensely popular, especially with stone tops and storage. You do need a minimum of 3.5 feet on each side around an island to comfortably move around. Breakfast bar is for those with space constraints. This can replace a dining table, as the stools can be tucked in under the counter, and one can engage with those inside the open kitchen.

Q: What makes a bathroom feel expensive even when you haven't spent a fortune?

A: Let's start with the faucet. Think about your bathroom faucet as a piece of jewellery. You can make a subtle step up from chrome to a unique finish – a gold finish or a bronze finish. Just that little twist is a great design step up and can really set a different tone in your bathroom.

Q: Is matte black already becoming dated? Which finishes do you think have staying power?

A: Matte black comes and goes. I think there's still a role for matte black, but I personally like a lot of the warmer finishes – gold, bronze, brushed bronze and brushed gold. To me, those are really beautiful classics. I also like brushed nickel and polished nickel.

Q: What bathroom habits or choices do you think Indian consumers should rethink?

A: I'm not going to say they are mistakes. Hygiene sprays around the toilet are obviously the standard product here in India. I would challenge Indian consumers to try a bidet seat, even a manual bidet attachment. We have some incredible designs that are really designed for ease of use and generally fit on any water closet.

We've found bidet seats are also great for toilet-training young children, while they are useful for older generations from a hygiene standpoint. Smart toilets are similar. Once you have one, you'll always want to have one.

Q: Is the bathtub actually making a comeback in India, or is the large shower the more realistic luxury?

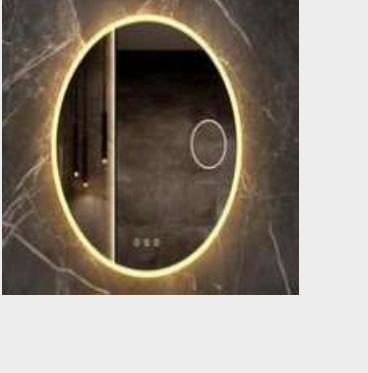

A: We're trying to get our team to be as passionate about bathtubs as I am. I do think there are probably more passionate bathers in India than in much of the rest of the world.

Bathing is such an important part of rituals, health, wellness and relaxation. It's simple to do, it's in your personal space and it's convenient to you. I think it really is important. There are a lot more bathers in the world than people realise.

Q: What does Kohler design differently for India?

A: Much of what we design and develop here in India can work in other parts of the world. We recently introduced a shower that's designed for the shoulders because a lot of women don't want to get their hair wet every time. It covers the shoulders and body, and that product is being taken up by many of our other markets as well.
