Ageing apartments and scarcity of vacant land parcels are driving interest, even as resident consensus remains elusive

Chennai's redevelopment opportunity

D. Govardan

The lack of vacant land parcels in the core areas of Chennai is driving builders to the suburbs to launch new and larger residential projects. But for those still wanting to buy new residential apartments within the city, redevelopment projects offer a viable option. A redevelopment project involves razing an old apartment building owned by multiple residents and replacing it with a modern development. For existing owners, the new building can offer amenities such as lifts and ample parking to meet their needs. In case of higher floor space index (FSI), existing owners get larger apartments, while the residual and leftover FSI will be sold by the builder to new buyers. It also allows builders to sell additional units to outsiders by using the additional FSI permitted by the CMDA (Chennai Metropolitan Development Authority). But this is easier said than done.

Uncertainty creates fear

For instance, Rajesh Chandramouli is president of corporate affairs at Shriram Group, a financial services company. He and his fellow residents have been trying to redevelop their 24-apartment complex in Adyar for over five years now, but with little luck. Arriving at a consensus and getting everyone on the same agenda has been proving to be difficult.

Vamsi Sai

Home is not just a place... it is a feeling." That saying is very much true. In today's stressful world, the way our homes are designed is quietly deciding how well we are able to cope.

People are now spending more time indoors than previous generations, which means our homes have never mattered more – especially in how it can support and enhance the mental and emotional well-being of its residents. Of course, residential architecture isn't therapy, and it won't undo an existing mental health struggle on its own. But research across the fields of environmental psychology, interior design and neuroarchitecture keeps pointing in the same direction: the spaces we live in affect our stress, focus, sleep, emotional response and regulation, cognitive performance, and even how we behave around other people.

Designing for well-being

From natural light to spatial flow, homes are being designed around how people feel

The big four

A few key elements in contemporary residential design and architecture can do most of the heavy lifting.

Spatial layout: Open, flowing spaces that don't restrict movement create a sense of freedom and ease. Pair shared areas for connection with quiet, private corners for reflection, and a home starts to support the mind instead of crowding it.

Strategic lighting: Big windows and plenty of daylight help lift mood and sharpen focus. Post sunset, a mix of warm ambient lights, task lighting for reading or cooking, and accent lighting on art or plants can collectively make a home feel personal and welcoming.

Designing for touch: Texture matters more than we admit. Raw wood, tumbled stone (smooth, rounded rocks), linen, honest (eco-friendly) fabrics – the friction of contrasting surfaces creates small moments of mindfulness and keeps people grounded.

Leveraging colour psychology: Every colour carries a mood. Warm reds and yellows in a living room bring energy, while the cooler greens and blues in a bedroom settle the body and mind.

Apart from the above, a lot of other things shape how a home makes us feel. For instance, how open or closed a space is. The way sound and light play off each other.

An open layout that brings people together and helps them bond with each other becomes an antidote to anxiety and loneliness. Considered acoustics and soft materials give you the quiet you need after a tiresome workday.

Biophilic or nature-based touches bring a sense of calm. A shared garden, a walkable path, a courtyard – these foster belonging and turn a stack of apartments into something closer to a community.

Other aspects

High-end hotels and resorts have always understood the importance of lighting, spatial flow, sensory comfort, etc., in curating memorable experiences. Many luxury residential projects now borrow from the hospitality playbook, adopting similar principles and elements as they aim to create homes that offer ease and emotional comfort.

Homebuyers are, of late, seeking much more than extravagant apartments – they want their homes to be aesthetically pleasing, but also deeply personal, and ones that contribute to their overall well-being. Developers are responding to this shift with wellness-led homes, including housing that prioritises mental health in particular. The next big opportunity India's residential realty is reaching for is neither a bigger home nor a smarter one. It is a healthier home.

“Redevelopment is a difficult corner to turn. While everyone may, in principle, be for it, many fear dislocation and the uncertainty that the entire process brings,” says Chandramouli. “Besides, if a new person buys into the complex, convincing them is an arduous task as nobody buys in for demolition and waits. The reality is there cannot be a perfect offer that satisfies all.”

The residents began exploring redevelopment options because the apartment complex is more than 30 years old and lacks lifts and designated car parking. Moreover, with the road level being raised over the years, the ground-floor apartments have started getting inundated during the monsoon. The residents felt redevelopment could address several of their problems, but consensus has remained elusive, with contentious issues such as GST and the cost of interiors hampering meaningful progress in discussions.

Pricing issue

Chandramouli is not alone in facing difficulties in arriving at a consensus because several factors come into play before the finalising a builder. For V.

in Anna Nagar, Kolathur and Korattur, Ramaniyam in Chennai South, and Baashyam, Bhagam and Amara in Besant Nagar and Thiruvanniyur. All core city areas such as Anna Nagar, Egmore, K.K. Nagar and Ashok Nagar could see verticalisation through redevelopment, wherever permissible under existing norms.

“Redevelopment is a land-recycling story, not a new-supply story. The city’s established localities were built out decades ago and have little developable land left,” says Preetham Mehra, senior executive director and head - Tamil Nadu and Kerala, CBRE, an international property advisor. “So, adding housing there means rebuilding on land that is already occupied. Land values have appreciated while the structures on them have depreciated, and redevelopment helps bridge this gap.”

Current viable options

According to Mehra, two things have made this more viable recently. An upward revision in permissible FSI means the same plot can now support more built-up area than the structure currently standing on it, which is what makes the economics work. And the expansion of metro connectivity has changed how residents view locations across the city, thereby opening areas that were previously not considered for relocation.

Jerry Kingsley, senior director, JLL India, an international property advisory firm, says, “The economy sits in what can be described as an FSI gap, where older housing projects typically operate at 1.5 FSI or less, while current norms including premium FSI allow plots to reach around 4.875 FSI. Structurally, this represents brownfield land aggregation [combining multiple adjacent, underutilised property parcels] involving less than one-acre plots with 8 to 40 owners, negotiated through an association rather than with a single landowner.”

According to him, a government order on apartment redevelopment, Apartment Ownership Act 2022, replaced the 1994 Act that required 100% unanimous consent requirement with a two-thirds majority threshold instead. The reform also unified fragmented public housing guidelines and abandoned the separate TNHB colony policy.

“The redevelopment opportunity is aimed at buildings beyond the 30-year mark, and the eligible pool inside the old Corporation limits expands every year. Mumbai has identified roughly 1.5 lakh ageing buildings and currently runs about 1,000+ redevelopment projects,” says Kingsley.

Upgraded civic infrastructure

While Central Chennai is transforming from low-density commercial blocks and older properties into high-end, ultra-luxury vertical residential towers, north Chennai is evolving from a congested industrial and logistics hub into an accessible, modernised residential frontier with upgraded civic infrastructure.

The change in established Chennai neighbourhoods through redevelopment will largely be restricted to new and larger buildings coming up in place of older buildings, besides high-rises wherever permissible.

According to W.S. Habib, managing director of RWD Pvt Ltd, a leading developer, and President, CREDAI TN, people can sell at market prices and make their presence felt within the core areas of the city. For the buyer, the biggest attraction is the opportunity to purchase a modern home in an established neighbourhood. However, developer credibility, approvals, construction quality, parking, maintenance costs and certainty of delivery will ultimately determine buyer confidence.

“While mostly it is a win-win situation for all as redevelopment can happen only as per approved norms, the lack of consensus or presence of a troublemaker or two among residents create hurdles and results in such projects getting stuck for a longer time,” he concludes.

Sandhya Balachandar, a lawyer and resident in Nanganallur, it took two-and-a-half years to bring all the member residents to agree on a particular builder for redevelopment.

“Ours is a 16-apartment complex with 13 owners. Initially, the residents recommended five or six builders, but differences emerged over the quality of construction and cost. “Since the residents include senior citizens, cost became an important criterion,” says Balachandar. “Most builders were offering good-quality construction, unlike in the past. Eventually, we reached a consensus and signed an agreement with a builder.”

She laments that the building's location on a 20-ft road and its proximity to the airport mean it is not eligible for any additional FSI. However, the new development will offer ample car parking and a lift.

Woes of TNHB

The problems are not restricted to residents of private apartments, but also to those who bought Tamil Nadu Housing Board (TNHB) flats. By virtue of its cluster development approach in the 70s and 80s, TNHB is now the largest supplier of redevelopment projects in Chennai, with properties in prime localities such as Thiruvanniyur, Besant Nagar, Indira Nagar, Anna Nagar and K.K. Nagar, among others.

However, TNHB has no role to play in the apartments that they already sold. They retain redevelopment rights in the case of rented apartments; they can sell these redeveloped flats in the open market to new buyers.

“Our 30-apartment building is now 48 years old. In recent years, due to its age and corrosion caused by its proximity to the sea, the building has started deteriorating in patches,” says Sathyabama, a professor at a private college in the city. “We have been trying to redevelop it for the past five years, but to no avail, as the Coastal Regulation Zone [CRZ] norms have made the process extremely difficult.”

According to her, the CRZ norms came into effect only in 1992, while their building was constructed in 1978. She feels that buildings constructed before the CRZ norms were introduced should be exempted when taken up for redevelopment, as such projects would in no way affect the livelihood of fishermen. After years of struggle, they recently obtained approval from the CMDA. However, there is still a long way to go before they can redevelop the building.

Strong social infrastructure

For developers too, redevelopment provides an opportunity to enter highly established micro-markets where fresh land parcels are scarce and expensive. These locations already have strong social infrastructure, schools, hospitals, retail and connectivity. Consequently, the sale component of a well-located redevelopment project can command a premium and generally carries lower location-related market risk than development in an emerging peripheral market.

Leading players in the redevelopment segment in Chennai are Pushkar and India Builders

India on the world stage

Three projects with Indian design links feature among RIBA's 34 International Awards for Excellence

Anisha Menezes

The Royal Institute of British Architects (RIBA) awards outstanding architectural projects each year. This year, 34 projects have been awarded the RIBA International Awards for Excellence from across 15 countries such as Austria, Australia, Bangladesh, and Belgium.

This wide-ranging tier of 34 winners is now in the running for the RIBA International Prize, which is awarded by a grand jury to the building considered the most significant outside the U.K. This 2026 cohort has been picked for its direct response to climate change, migration and rapid urbanisation.

Three of the winning projects have a direct Indian architectural connection: Parikrama, a home in Maharashtra's Murud region, designed by Mumbai-based SPASM Design Architects; the DY Patil University Centre of Excellence, Navi Mumbai, designed by Foster + Partners (U.K.); and Château de Beaucastel, a renovation and extension of a 17th-century wine-making estate by Studio Mumbai, an Indian design firm along with Studio Méditerranée from Courthézon, France.

Neil Gillespie, chair of the RIBA International Awards Group, says both climate resilience and community were important factors when selecting this year's winning projects. "What excites the jury is when local knowledge – of materials, of craft traditions, of how communities have historically responded to their environment – is brought into dialogue with contemporary architectural ambition," adds Gillespie.

The freelance writer is based in Chennai.

Project: DY Patil University Centre of Excellence, Navi Mumbai

Studio: Foster + Partners (U.K.)

Chancellor Vijay Patil commissioned the DY Patil University Center of Excellence, an academic and residential campus for 3,000 students in Navi Mumbai. The project is a mosaic of teaching, social and living spaces built around a two-acre linear sky garden, with an elevated landscape and water bodies. The project achieved a LEED Platinum certification (awarded under the U.S. Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design programme) through the use of passive shading, ultra-low water consumption, low-impact construction material and wind tower-assisted ventilation. The site was developed over a decade, with the university acquiring the construction equipment and employing local labour.

Chris Bubb, senior partner of Foster + Partners, a global studio for sustainable architecture, elaborates on the community being the beating heart of the centre. "The project's design needed to create an inspiring environment that facilitated learning. But it was equally important to produce an environment that uplifted the students socially – through open spaces designed to engage students in collaboration and discussion." The building uses GGBS (ground granulated blast-furnace slag; a by-product of iron and steel-making) in its concrete, offering a 60% lower carbon footprint than traditional cement.

Shaded external spaces and hidden ventilation shafts allow natural cooling, and 72% of the building's water supply is derived from recycling and rainwater harvesting. The use of glass-reinforced concrete (GRC) on its façade keeps heat out while letting natural light filter in. The upper residential units are clad in lightweight cast and extruded aluminium, fortifying the structure against the vagaries of the monsoon weather.

"The building uses less than a third of the energy of equivalent buildings in the area and 25% less energy than we initially predicted," says Bubb. The ground floor of the centre houses a café, reception, informal study spaces and an exhibition zone to enhance organic interaction. The School of Business on the campus is enveloped by shaded courtyards, with four large auditoriums and a sunken amphitheatre. The centre has a four-level library, with academic sessions across the first four storeys, and five residential levels directly above. The building is inclusive, with step-free access and intuitive way finding.

the sweltering heat, humidity, and torrid monsoons through passive strategies and material logic. The large floor-to-ceiling windows are meant to disappear against the luscious coastal greenery. 40mm granite slabs were used with minimal processing from quarry to site. Conceived as a blend of ancient material and modern sensibilities, the project is seen as an assemblage of giant panels of glass against massive stone slabs.

Conceived around a continuous parikrama, or circumambulatory path, the house has a series of connecting rooms along a linear axis with generous verandas. The living and dining areas are positioned at the ends of the building, with bedrooms and community spaces in between. Nine-foot-wide verandas provide cross-ventilation and are protected by cantilevered zinc roofs with deep eaves, designed to shield the structure from heat and rain. The granite acts as a heat battery: absorbing and storing heat and slowly releasing it later, to keep indoor temperatures stable. The large operable glass walls minimise reliance on mechanical air conditioning. As night falls, the glass glows, and the granite slowly hides in plain sight.

Project: Parikrama

Studio: SPASM Design Architects, Mumbai

Parikrama is ensconced within a coconut grove in Murud (near Nandgaon) on the tropical Konkan coast of Maharashtra. Sangeetha Merchant and Sanjeev Panjabi, founders of SPASM Design Architects, built this house for an acquaintance – who represents a Portuguese window producer, Panoramah.

The 8,050 sq.ft. house is designed to address

Project: Château de Beaucastel, Courthézon (France)

Studio: Studio Mumbai + Studio Méditerranée

How do you execute the renovation of a working vineyard over seven years? That was one of the unique challenges posed to the teams at Studio Mumbai and Studio Méditerranée when they took on the modernisation of Château de Beaucastel, Courthézon (France). A 25,000 m excavation site yielded clay, sand, and pebbles that were transformed into rammed earth, earth-based paints and site-specific concrete. Existing buildings were deconstructed, and the salvaged wood, stone, tiles and metal were used in the new design, retaining the material core of the site. Along with climate-responsive design (wind catchers, water cisterns and natural ventilation), this approach yielded to the client's desire to modernise their winemaking infrastructure, while holding onto the historic and environmental character of the estate.

"The design had to respond not only to architectural ambition, but also to harvest cycles, production constraints and the day-to-day life of the estate," explains Louis-Antoine Grégo, founder of Studio Méditerranée (Avignon, France).

Twenty-nine Indian makers join global artisans at Homo Faber Biennale in Venice this September

K.S. Swati

An international showcase of contemporary craftsmanship, the fourth edition of the Homo Faber Biennale will be held in Venice from September 1 to 30. Curated by Michelangelo Foundation, this year's edition is themed 'An Island of Light' and led by Artistic Director Es Devlin. JSW Foundation has collaborated with the Biennale to support the participation of 29 Indian artists who will display works across a range of crafts, including ceramics, glass, metal, textiles, leather, wood, stone and basketry. Says Sangita Jindal, chairperson, JSW Foundation, "We are proud that JSW Foundation will participate... creating an international stage where Indian master artisans engage with global audiences, [and] not as representatives of folklore, but as peers in a shared creative language." Here are a few shortlisted participants. (For the complete list, visit www.thehindu.com)

WOOD

Akon Mitra and Shalini Mithal

Akon Mitra is an architect, landscape designer and sculptor. His passion for observing nature and the human body led to the founding of Oritecture, a multidisciplinary atelier based in New Delhi, dedicated to origami as a language of contemporary craft, sculpture and spatial design. It was founded in 2008. Shalini Mithal, once an English teacher, is today a self-taught fibre artist and facilitator based in Gurugram. She started off with embroidery and macramé sessions, which soon grew into a sustained practice. Mother, We Cut You Down to Sculpt You and Weave You by Mitra and Mithal is a sculpture made of macramé with paper twine assembled onto seasoned acacia driftwood and protected with matte varnish. It will be showcased at the 'A Rooted Ascent' exhibition.

Reha Salvi

Reha Salvi has over a decade of experience as an architect and interior designer. A self-taught woodcutter from Chennai, she founded Lakkadghoom, where she turns, carves and chars neem and teak wood to create vessels and sculptures. She collects shells and seed pods from the shore and recreates their shapes in wood. Her two works, From The Shore and Beej, made from neem wood, charred and finished with raw linseed oil, then waxed and buffed, will be showcased at 'A Rooted Ascent'.

CERAMIC

Kunal Ukey

Kunal Ukey makes terracotta vessels so small that the tiniest is no bigger than a mustard seed. He works off the hump, raising a mound of clay on the wheel and drawing each vessel from its peak. He shapes the walls with his fingers and fingernails until they are as thin as paper, using a needle to shape the mouths and a fine blade for trimming. Fired by reduction and oxidation, the pots emerge in two colours from a single clay and are arranged by the hundred in gridded wooden frames of his own making. His work will be displayed in 'An Alphabet of Objects' exhibition.

Vipul Kumar

Vipul Kumar works in Bhainslana, a village near Jaipur known for its black marble mines. Formally trained in sculpture and stone carving, he now creates large ceramic forms in porcelain. He works entirely by hand, pinching and modelling the clay, and adds paper and grog to keep the walls thin and light before firing them in a gas kiln. He uses mineral glazes and colourants such as chrome oxide to create weathered, cratered surfaces. The finished forms resemble objects shaped by violent geological events. His sculpture Environmental Explorations 4 will be in the exhibition space 'An Atelier Alive'. Made in porcelain, the work combines white, green and rust-coloured forms in a hollow, uneven body.

STONE

Rooshad Shroff

Shroff is a Mumbai-based architect and designer. His work explores material, structure and creation, collaborating with Indian artisans in stone carving, wood joinery, marble inlay, embroidery and metal casting. He also likes to experiment, with embroidery on stone, for instance. Shroff's Balance Vase, hand-carved from orange calcite, will be showcased at 'A Rainbow of Forms'.

Kavin Mehta

Kavin Mehta set up his studio in Ahmedabad in 2015. He taught himself how to carve discarded blocks of stone and now works with limestone and calcium-rich marble. He carves the stone by hand and submerges it in natural indigo dye. It takes 10-15 days for the colour to show. Mehta is also director of the Indigo Art Museum in Ahmedabad. His sculpture Prelude, made of hand-carved natural limestone and dyed in natural indigo, will be presented at the 'A Rooted Ascent' exhibition.

ACRYLIC

Nalini Mehta

Nalini Mehta is a Mumbai-based artist whose career spans eight decades. Trained in painting, batik, pastel and sculpture, she is best known for her distinctive internal carving technique in acrylic. She is the oldest artisan participating in the biennale. In 2013, Mehta received the National Award for Creative Art at the inaugural Vayoshreshtha Samman, a Government of India award recognising the achievements of senior citizens. Her work, Parakeet, will be displayed as part of 'An Infinite Birdsong'.
