Dining room trends

From sculptural furniture to heirloom accents, homes across Indian cities showcase evolving preferences

Rashmi Gopal Rao

It is not an understatement to say that the dining room is one space that has undergone a tremendous transformation in recent times, amongst all the other spaces in a home. Traditionally, it was synonymous only with meal times; often reserved for formal occasions, and many a time underused. “The dining space today is the emotional heart of the home. Post-pandemic living has permanently reshaped how families think about gathering; there’s a deeper appreciation for shared meals, slow conversations, and intentional togetherness,” says Ninada Kashyap, principal designer, Alkove-Design, an architecture and design firm in Pune. There is little doubt that the role of the dining space and the dining table is fluid. It is crafted to move from an intimate breakfast nook to a collaborative work surface and even a celebratory gathering spot. “It can transform into a space for casual work sessions, long conversations, celebrations or even quiet moments during the day. Homes have become far more fluid and lifestyle-driven, and the dining space frequently acts as a connector between the kitchen, living area and other social spaces within the home,” says Aditi Savani, founder, Studio Tattva by Aditi, a luxury interior design firm based in Mumbai. There is also a greater personal investment in the dining room as a space of enduring significance.

Chennai's next growth story begins Off GST – CPRR*

(*Chennai Peripheral Ring Road / Singaperumal Kovil - Oragadam Road)

For decades, Chennai's real estate growth has followed infrastructure. Locations that once seemed peripheral transformed into high-value destinations when connectivity, employment, and urban development converged. Today, that next growth story is unfolding in the Off GST Road CPRR corridor between Singaperumal Kovil and Oragadam.

Strategically positioned between Chennai's established GST Road corridor - Singaperumal Kovil and the industrial powerhouse of Oragadam, this location benefits from a unique convergence of employment, connectivity, and future infrastructure.

The region is already home to 22+ Fortune 500 companies and some of India's largest manufacturing investments. Daimler India Commercial Vehicles, one of Daimler's largest truck manufacturing facilities outside Germany, Renault-Nissan Automotive India, a major export-oriented automobile hub, Apollo Tyres, Foxconn, Samsung, Dell, Royal Enfield, and hundreds of ancillary industries have transformed this belt into one of South India's most powerful employment centres, supporting over 1 lakh+ professionals.

The biggest catalyst for the next phase of growth is the Chennai Peripheral Ring Road (CPRR). This landmark 132-km corridor will seamlessly connect Ennore port to Mahaballipuram via industrial hubs, national highways, logistics parks, and the future airport ecosystem. As CPRR strengthens connectivity across Oragadam and Singaperumal Kovil, travel times will reduce, commercial investments will accelerate, and residential demand is expected to rise significantly. Coupled with the upcoming Parandur International Airport, SIPCOT expansion, and the Chennai-Bengaluru Industrial Corridor, the region is poised for long-term infrastructure-led appreciation.

At the heart of this opportunity is Urbano Paulsn Gardens - a professionally planned 10-acre community featuring 196 premium residential plots. Developed as the Gold Standard of Plots, it offers high-quality engineered paver roads, over 27,000 sq.ft. of landscaped parks and open spaces, an open-air gym, cricket practice nets, a 2.6 km walking track, solar-powered street lighting, underground storm-water drainage systems, water pipeline provisions, 24x7 security, and 5 years of planned maintenance. Every element is designed not just for better living, but to protect and enhance long-term property value.

Urbando Paulsn Gardens - Golden Location. Golden Future. Golden Opportunity !
Starting from Rs.22 lakhs onwards, the plots range between 762 to 2370 sq.ft.

In an age defined by amplification of voices, visuals and valuations, luxury has long been synonymous with visibility. It announced itself through ornamentation and unmistakable signals of affluence. Yet, across industries, from fashion to hospitality to real estate, a quieter, more enduring philosophy is taking hold.

The most discerning homeowners are no longer drawn to what dazzles at first glance, but to what endures over time – spaces that reveal their value in layers, through design, materiality and experience. In this shift from statement to substance lies quiet luxury: a more thoughtful, more personal expression of premium living. The Indian market is not only ready for this shift, it is embracing it. Premium housing now accounts for nearly 62% of total residential sales in 2025, up significantly from prior years, reflecting a decisive tilt towards higher-value living experiences.

The quiet luxury pivot

As the housing market evolves, buyers are prioritising timeless design and quality materials over display

Timeless architectural design
Quiet luxury begins with architecture that transcends time. This shift is evident in the growing preference for developments that prioritise proportion, natural light and contextual design over superficial embellishment. Across India's metropolitan skylines, from Mumbai to Bengaluru, new residential developments are increasingly defined by thoughtful layouts and sustainable design strategies rather than visual excess. As market data suggests, high-end real estate is increasingly viewed as a legacy asset, not merely a transactional purchase.

Exceptional materials
The second pillar of quiet luxury lies in the integrity of materials.

Here, the emphasis is not on rarity for its own sake, but on authenticity, craftsmanship and longevity. India's luxury housing segment is reshaping allied industries through demand for bespoke specifications, precision-engineered fittings and artisanal finishes. Every tactile element, from stone to wood, is expected to embody both durability and aesthetic restraint. Choices are guided less by immediate visual impact and more by performance and provenance. The conversation, increasingly, is about precision and how materials are sourced, how they are crafted and how seamlessly they come together.

Refined minimalism
Minimalism, in the context of quiet luxury, is not about absence – it is about intention. It is the discipline of eliminating the unnecessary to elevate what remains. Post-pandemic shifts have accelerated this mindset, with homebuyers prioritising clarity of space, multifunctionality and emotional comfort over sheer size or ornamentation. Refined minimalism manifests in clean lines and considered proportions, where every element has a purpose, and nothing feels excessive. It prioritises clarity over clutter, allowing space, light and materiality to take precedence, creating environments that feel deeply intentional.

Peaceful atmosphere

Perhaps the most intangible yet powerful pillar of quiet luxury is atmosphere. True luxury today is measured by how a space makes one feel. Modern developments are increasingly designed as ecosystems that integrate wellness, nature, and privacy into everyday living. Landscaped courtyards, biophilic design, and low-density planning are becoming central to premium projects. This aligns with a broader societal shift. Post-pandemic, buyers are seeking homes that double as sanctuaries, spaces that support wellbeing, mindfulness and a calmer pace of life.

The future

India's luxury real estate market, currently valued at around $64 billion and projected to reach $105-108 billion by 2030-31, is entering a phase of maturation. As wealth creation and global exposure deepen, expectations are becoming more nuanced. Quiet luxury represents this evolution. It is a move away from spectacle towards substance. For developers and industry leaders, this marks a fundamental inflection point. The opportunity lies not in building more, but in building meaningfully. In the years ahead, leadership in luxury real estate will not be claimed by those who amplify it the most, but by those who distil it to its purest form, creating spaces that are not just aspirational, but quietly exceptional.

India's real estate map is being redrawn, not by policy alone, but by a generation that grew up on broadband and refuses to accept a two-hour commute as the price of a career.

Gen Z, broadly those born between 1995 and 2010, has entered the workforce in large enough numbers that its preferences are no longer a soft cultural observation. They are starting to register in transaction volumes, rental yields and developer launch decisions in cities that most institutional investors had not seriously underwritten until recently.

Deloitte's 2025 Gen Z and Millennial Survey, covering over 23,000 respondents across 44 countries, found work-life balance to be the single most cited factor when Gen Zs choose an employer, ranking ahead of salary and career progression. Nine in ten also said a sense of purpose mattered to their job satisfaction.

One can debate whether these are generational traits or simply what happens when a cohort enters the workforce during a period of economic uncertainty and pandemic-era flexibility, but one thing is becoming increasingly clear: younger professionals are placing far greater value on workplace environments that feel collaborative, transparent and free from rigid hierarchies. Comfort, flexibility and a healthier professional atmosphere are becoming equally important factors in deciding not just where they work, but also where they choose to live.

The city pull

For most of the past two decades, cities such as Mumbai and Delhi-NCR held an almost automatic pull. Graduates from places like Lucknow, Jaipur or Chandigarh moved because that was where the jobs, professional networks, and career opportunities were concentrated. The calculation was straightforward, even when the costs were punishing. A 1-BHK in Andheri at a rent that ate half the salary was still the rational choice if the alternative was stagnation at home.

GETTY IMAGES/ISTOCK

The great tier-2 shift

Gen Z's work-life priorities are reshaping India's smaller cities into major real estate investment destinations

Hybrid work has introduced a third option that did not meaningfully exist before. A professional in Lucknow drawing a Mumbai salary and logging into meetings from a co-working space three days a week is not a fringe case anymore. Once people start to make housing decisions, the city they choose tends to be the one they are already living in.

Where the numbers are pointing

Lucknow recorded a 25% year-on-year rise in residential unit sales in 2025, but what stands out is the kind of buyer driving that demand. Much of the momentum is coming from end-users – returning professionals and local families who have become far more intentional about where and how they want to live. Prop Equity's Q1 2025 data placed Lucknow among the leading tier-2 cities for new project launches, underlining the confidence developers have in the city's long-term housing demand rather than speculative activity.

A similar pattern is visible in cities such as Jaipur, Chandigarh and Mohali, where lifestyle housing and plotted developments are seeing steady absorption. Better connectivity, improving social infrastructure and accessible pricing are making these markets increasingly attractive for buyers who feel priced out of larger metros or simply want a better quality of life for the same budget.

The projected annual appreciation of 8% to 12% in these cities, compared to roughly 5% to 8% in larger urban centres, is tied closely to real demand and the pace at which these cities are evolving. In many ways, these markets are now catching up to the infrastructure and economic growth that have been building over the past few years.

From an investment standpoint, the shift becomes far more meaningful when demand starts extending beyond housing. A few years ago, many of these cities were seen largely as residential markets with limited commercial activity. Today, more professionals are choosing to stay in places such as Indore, Coimbatore and other tier-2 cities instead of automatically moving to larger metros, and that is steadily reshaping the kind of demand these markets generate. Even then, expectations around quality of life have not changed. People still want access to good offices, reliable infrastructure and a city environment that feels connected and well-developed.

The market is also responding to this change and we are seeing many startups emerging outside the traditional metro ecosystem. Companies are becoming more open to distributed teams, and co-working operators are finding demand in cities where organised Grade-A office supply was once extremely limited.

Almost 15% of India's technology talent already resides in tier-2 and tier-3 cities (as per Colliers India) and this number continues to rise steadily with decentralised work models gaining wider acceptance. This is opening new avenues even for the developers, who are eyeing this as a long-term opportunity. The conversation is gradually moving away from simply selling homes and towards creating cities where young professionals are seeking to realistically build both their professional and personal lives.

Long-term winners

The opportunity in tier-2 real estate is compelling, but it is not without complexity. Liquidity remains shallower than in larger metros, infrastructure delivery can be uneven, and not every emerging market will sustain long-term demand. In many cases, the difference between a high-performing micro-market and an overhyped one may come down to connectivity execution, employment visibility and developer credibility.

In a market like this, disciplined underwriting becomes far more important. Broad optimism around tier-2 cities alone is no longer enough to justify investment decisions. The stronger opportunities are more likely to come from locations where housing demand is backed by steady employment, improving infrastructure and genuine end-user interest instead of short-term excitement or speculative activity.

At the same time, the larger shift is becoming increasingly difficult to overlook. A younger workforce that values flexibility, affordability and quality of life is gradually changing how and where people choose to live. As a result, tier-2 cities are no longer being viewed as fringe investment stories or secondary alternatives to metros. They are steadily becoming a more established part of India's long-term real estate growth narrative.

The First Layer by Understorey, HomAnAn; Delhi

The dining space in this 4,000 sq.ft. residence was envisioned as an inviting, contemporary retreat rooted in quiet luxury and timeless functionality. “The furniture language focused on soft sculptural forms with clean silhouettes and tactile wood finishes. The dining table features rounded edges and a grounded monolithic presence paired with upholstered chairs that soften the overall visual balance,” says Aneja. The palette remained earthy and layered with warm oak tones, textured neutrals, muted fabrics, handcrafted décor accents.

Warm wood, soft upholstery and banana fibre pendant lights create an atmosphere that is layered without being heavy, Aneja suggests.

The wood-paneled backdrop with its integrated ledge is perhaps the most thoughtful element in the room. “It resists definition – equally at home displaying art, holding books and collected objects, or functioning as a serving console when the table is full and the evening is long,” adds Aneja.

“Clients desire a dining room that feels vibrant rather than meticulously preserved. They seek heirlooms, say a carpet passed down through generations, hand-carved furniture, custom joinery, etc. There is a clear rejection of the generic and mass-produced,” says Mita Mehta, founder, interior stylist and curator, Mita Mehta Studio, an interior styling studio based in New Delhi.

Subtle luxury

“Natural stones with expressive veining, textured wood finishes, hand-finished surfaces, fluted details, and statement lighting are being used to create dining spaces that feel timeless yet deeply personal. Another significant shift is the growing connection with nature. Whether through large openings, earthy palettes, organic

Compact urban spaces

- Compact dining spaces require a sense of openness to be created; a round or oval table is often ideal as it softens the room, fosters conversation, and occupies less visual space than a rectangular form. A fold-down table fixed to a wall is also a good idea.
- Combining chairs with a bench on one side provides flexibility without clutter. Slender cane or metal chairs with slimmer profiles and lighter legs help maintain an open vibe.
- Vertical storage nooks, built-in seating and multifunctional furniture can help keep the zone de-cluttered.
- Light-toned woods, reflective finishes, textured neutrals and layered lighting can visually expand a dining area and add depth to smaller footprints.
- Mirrors, statement pendants, and subtle architectural detailing can help create character without overwhelming the space.

materials or indoor greens, dining spaces are becoming more grounded and sensory in their experience,” adds Savani.

Another key trend is multifunctionality elevated with subtle luxury, such as extendable tables crafted from ethically sourced timber, paired with flexible seating and thoughtfully integrated storage. “We have juxtaposed wood with stone, glass or muted metals to create tangible layers of interest. Rich textures and earthy neutrals, combined with textured finishes, drive personalisation. At the same time, the space itself is often demarcated with architectural devices, such as inlaid floor patterns or light-washed partitions rather than conventional walls,” says Rachna Agarwal, founder and design ideator, Studio IAAD, an interior design studio in Gurugram.

Colours, textures and more

Warm ivories, muted taupes, deep browns, mushroom, sage and soft greys are particularly popular because they create an earthy and timeless vibe. “Sandstone, warm white, aged terracotta, deep forest green are colours that feel grounded without being cold. Amber and warm gold are having a particular moment,” says Neha Kataria, interior designer, LA Archplan, Creative Director, Jay Strongwater by The Right Address. Texture has also become equally important, with a strong preference for layered materiality through wood grains, brushed metals, handcrafted finishes, linen upholstery, fluted surfaces, and natural stone with expressive movement.

Materials such as travertine, marble, oak, walnut, cane and artisanal metal finishes continue to remain relevant. Reclaimed or responsibly sourced wood with all its natural imperfections is also in vogue. Today, people are gravitating towards interiors that feel tactile, nuanced and lived-in. “Brass appears across various elements, applied thoughtfully to light fittings, cabinet hardware, and table legs. Silk, velvet, linen and handwoven fabrics are favoured for upholstery. Texture stands as the unsung hero of dining-room design. Layering a stone table with a silk runner, pairing a velvet chair with an oakwood frame, and placing a handwoven rug beneath creates a sensory and lively ambience in a way that paint and furniture alone cannot achieve,” adds Mehta.

Lighting has become the emotional anchor of the dining space. “A single oversized pendant crafted from handblown glass, banana fibre or architectural rattan – now receives the same intention once reserved for a statement table. Indian craft and artisanal identity are finding their place at the table quite literally,” says Anubha Laroia Aneja, founder of HomAnAn, an immersive luxury design showhouse. Aneja adds, “Channapatna wood, Rajasthan hand-carved sideboards, Dokra metal accents and block-printed runners are some of the elements being chosen for provenance and story and not just aesthetic.”

Here is a look at some well-designed dining rooms.

The Bengaluru-based freelance writer is passionate about all things design, travel, food, art and culture.

Gradient of Earth, Alkove Design; Pune

The dining space in this Pune residence sits at the junction of the living and kitchen zones and is visible from across the home. The walls and ceiling are unified in a hand-applied yellow ochre limewash that gives the space its signature mood: a space that shifts from soft gold in daylight to richer and more honeyed by evening light.

upholstered dining chairs in solid wood with terracotta-rust seat pads. Behind the table, a long, warm-toned sideboard runs the length of the wall, styled with turned wooden candlesticks, ceramic vessels, and curated objects that feel personal and unhurried,” says Mittal.

She also adds, “Two glass pendant lights hang above the table, their faceted forms casting a gentle, warm light that completes the intimacy of the space.”

Vyom, Studio Tattva; Mumbai

The dining space at Vyom was envisioned as an extension of the home’s fluid architectural language, where arches, softness, movement and continuity take precedence. Positioned against expansive views of the Arabian Sea, the dining area seamlessly connects with the living space while still maintaining its own identity within the home. “The layout was intentionally kept open and conversational, it is anchored by a sculptural dining table with soft curves and tactile materiality. The furniture language follows an organic rhythm with rounded edges, plush seating and layered textures that together create a feeling of warmth and intimacy. The colour palette remains understated yet rich, comprising warm neutrals, muted earthy tones, textured wood finishes and elegant natural stone surfaces,” adds Savani.

Reddy House, Mita Mehta Studios; Hyderabad

The focus of the formal dining room in this 18,000 sq.ft. house is art that has been thoughtfully curated. It is anchored by a large rectangular dining table with a rich grey-veined marble top and a fluted stone base.

Around it sit eight chairs upholstered in deep teal velvet, with warm oak legs and polished brass hardware. The combination of the cool marble, the richly pigmented velvet and the brass creates an elegant palette without being cold.

“Two walls of this dining room present very different moods. On one side, a fluted plaster panel in a warm blush-grey tone provides the backdrop for a large framed Suzani textile from Central Asia; its reds, blacks and intricate medallion patterns bringing centuries of craft and travel into the room,” says Mehta.

Whereas, on the opposite wall, a rich walnut-veneered panel frames an oversized figurative painting in dark, dramatic tones: a seated woman rendered with classical realism. Overhead, a spectacular chandelier featuring rows of hand-blown glass cylinders is suspended from a brass armature. The flooring is polished marble in a soft and warm grey.

Lodha House, Studio IAAD; Goa

Spread across 250-300 sq.ft., the dining area of this 6,000 sq.ft. residence, which has been designed as a contemporary tropical retreat, acts as a transitional zone between the formal living areas and the outdoors.

“Its placement along the home’s central axis ensures uninterrupted visual continuity, including pool views, allowing the dining experience to feel immersive, open and continuously connected to natural light and greenery,” adds Agarwal.

The colour palette draws from earthy neutrals and warm natural tones like beige and olive green. The texture of the dining area combines smooth plastered surfaces, natural stone, wood finishes and tactile fabrics. Rather than being treated as an isolated room, the dining area becomes part of a larger spatial experience where living, dining and outdoor functions merge effortlessly.
