Waste discarded despite GCC's notice

Waste is being dumped near the intersection of Krishnadoss Fourth Street and Krishnadoss Main Road in Mangalapuram near Perambur.

A month ago, Greater Chennai

Corporation had installed a banner cautioning the public not to dump waste in that spot. However, scant respect is paid to the GCC's notice. People continue to dump waste here.

It may be noted that the State Government's study hall and co-working space, Mudhalvar Padaippagam, and a Greater Chennai Corporation-run school are located here. But the place is unhygienic.

'Footpath in Collector Nagar needs mending'

The section of footpath near Collector Nagar bus stop on Ambattur - Thirumangalam Road is damaged. The tiles are broken. The roots of a tree are protruding. Pedestrians, especially senior citizens, need to exercise caution. Commuters at the bus stop say, there have been a few instances where people have fallen.

Here buses toward Island Grounds halt.

Unfriendly footpath in school zone

The section of the footpath near Greater Chennai Corporation-run school on Cooks Road is unsafe.

The footpath and manholes of stormwater drains are broken.

Also, a few manholes are protruding. A vendor has occupied the footpath to keep baskets. It may be noted, Cooks Road witnesses good traffic during peak hours.

Another concern is that a garbage bin is placed at the entrance of the school. Vendors along the road make use of it.

A place of worship and an office of Ministry of Labour & Employment are located on Cooks Road in addition to the school. But the stretch lacks a good footpath.

▼ The footpath at Cooks Road on September 14, 2026.

Bus stop gets a shelter

▼ A shelter has been set up for the Anna Nagar roundtana bus stop on Second Avenue Road. Here, buses towards Mogappair, Ambattur and Padi halt. This stop witnesses a good number of commuters during peak hours. However, it lacked a shelter all these years. This stop is near Anna Nagar East metro station.

Residents association in Thirumoolar Colony sets up study hall

It accepts donation of books meant for competitive examinations

The residents welfare association of Thirumoolar Colony in Anna Nagar is known for taking active interest in the upkeep of its neighbourhood.

The association, called Thirumoolar Colony Narpani Munetra Sangam, has set up a study hall for youngsters preparing for competitive examinations. It was inaugurated this February.

"The hall measures 500 sq.m. It was built on a land belonging to Tamil Nadu Urban Habitat Development Board at a cost of ₹16,000 which was raised through crowd funding. Residents and many well-wishers of the association contributed the sum. The facility is under CCTV surveillance. Drinking water and restroom facilities are available. The aim of setting up this facility is to provide a conducive environment for youngsters to prepare for their examinations," says K. Ganesan, the association's president.

Ever since its inauguration, the facility witnesses good patronage.

"On an average, 15 to 20 aspirants make use of the hall. Though we constructed this facility for youngsters of our neighbourhood, residents of other areas are also welcome," says A. Kumaresan, the association's secretary.

The association accepts donation of books meant for competitive exams.

"Some have generously contributed textbooks. One of the residents has subscribed for three English dailies," adds Kumaresan.

The study hall is located at Plot No: 1, Thirumoolar Street, Thirumoolar Colony, Anna Nagar. It functions from 9 a.m. to 8.30 p.m. on all days of the week.

Those interested in donating books may call 94444 33868 / 99620 30948.

A scary sight

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

The Santhanams live in constant fear. From their apartment window at Central Avenue in Korattur, a dangerously leaning tree is resting on a fully grown one. And this is a potential threat to the building and the safety of its people. Every time it rains or it is windy, the anxiety level of family members increases.

S. Prabhu, a family member, says this has been the state of the tree for many months and they have complained to GCC's helpline number and TVK party's helpline support. Both the groups have visited the spot to verify the facts shared in the complaint by the family and have promised action but nothing has been done so far.

"GCC's team had trimmed the branches of the healthy-looking tree," says Prabhu. He says the apartment was allotted by Tamil Nadu Housing Board and has many blocks, with the one where the Sathanams are residing has 12 flats.

"We are not for uprooting the tree. It has grown with the colony, but its current state is such that we fear it would damage our flat," says Prabhu.

Taking a shot at a rare avocation

Dealers of airguns in Chennai note that enthusiasts of recreational airgun target shooting are on the rise

LAKSHMY HARIKRISHNAN

A sharp crack followed by a silence probably lasting just a picosecond and therefore going unregistered, and then the loud pop of a balloon bursting from a pellet shot. Those sounds, in that sequence, are heard every day at Marina and Bessie. And usually, to create that sequence of sounds ten times on the trot, with the hire of an air rifle and a balloon target screen, a beach-goer would have to part with ₹50. There are those who seek to make this one-time indulgence a regular habit not by visiting the beach every day, but by a one-time visit to a shop selling airguns.

Welcome to the hobby of recreational airgun shooting which can be practised in a controlled environment at one's own private space. At Asian Air Guns on Perambur Barracks Road, Ashwin Kumar underlines that owning an airgun does not entail getting a license by meeting a fusillade of requirements. That said, there are still requirements to be met. One, the buyer has to be at least 18 years of age and offer proof of identity by presenting a copy of their Aadhar card or driving license. "Aadhar card is preferred," he emphasises.

Another requirement, something that cannot be met by the presentation of a photocopied document, is responsible behaviour. There is discretion to be followed while carrying an air rifle or air pistol. Brandish it in public, and you would find yourself on the wrong side of the law, the act being counted as a punishable offence. While being transported, the airgun has to be carried in a case, covered and hidden from the public, Ashwin explains.

"When we sell an airgun, irrespective of the price at which it is sold, we take a primer on how to use it, which includes how to use it responsibly. We cannot expect everyone to know the dos and don'ts of it and hence the time, 30 to 45 minutes, we spend educating them," says Ashwin, adding that airgun literacy is indispensable given that target shooting enthusiasts are on the increase. A good number of them take up target shooting away from the glare of the sporting arena because of the quiet benefits it brings to the mind: focus and stress-busting rejuvenation. But an equally good number of them would be cutting their shooting tooth on airguns with the objective of eventually graduating to professional shooting, which involves getting a license. Ashwin likens it to learning to ride a basic scooter before entering a bike race, "If you want to become a bike racer you first learn to ride an Activa."

Besides the logical learning process, there is also economy involved in taking it step by step. He elaborates: "Joining a shooting club and taking up advanced training would automatically lead someone to invest heavily in costly equipment. And what if someone discovers shooting is not their thing after making that investment? Airguns is a cost-effective way for someone to find out whether shooting is for them or not." And even with an air pistol and air rifle, one could enter a competitive fray, nationally and internationally, as a category with 10M air rifle for men and women and air pistol for men and women exists.

Ashwin brings this perspective to table as he has been on the other side of the counter as well, as a buyer of shooting equipment for his own use, being a licensed shooter and a member of Chennai Rifle Club. In fact, he shares a passion for shooting with his father S. Ramesh Balaji who established Asian Air Guns in 2005. Both father and son have made a comeback to the shooting range, the former after a 25-year hiatus and the latter, a 10-year break. But as for their business, they want to stick to selling just airguns.

Anna City Armoury also has a history etched with father-son teamwork. Located on Raja Muthiah Road in Periamet, the shop was started in 1993 by T. Selvamani, who had earlier worked with P. Orr & Sons. The "Armoury" in the enterprise's name signifies continuity in Selvamani's professional life. P. Orr & Sons had a link with the armoury business before being associated entirely with horology. The last embers of its identity as a manufacturer and seller of firearms were smouldering in 1967.

Anna City Armoury is run by Selvamani's son, S. Sivabalan, 49, who joined his father while pursuing his degree, and would go on to take over the business entirely after his father's demise in 2015. The shop deals in airguns as well as firearms that require license on the part of the buyer as well as the dealer. Sivabalan admits that the latter, that is selling airguns is the easier proposition. But that is not without its challenges either: one of them is that helped by technology, manufacturers sell directly to consumers with the result that the middle ground occupied by dealers has narrowed.

Chennai's little Krishnas and Radhas steal the limelight

More than 1,000 children from across Chennai and the neighbouring districts of Kancheepuram, Tiruvallur and Chengalpattu participated in this edition of The Hindu Downtown Maya Kannan

Maya Kannan 2026 authored by The Hindu Downtown concluded on a joyous note with the grand prize distribution ceremony held at Gyan Bhawan Auditorium in AM Jain College, Meenambakkam on September 13.

The contest received an overwhelming response with the participation of more than 1,000 children from across Chennai and the neighbouring districts of Kancheepuram, Tiruvallur and Chengalpattu. As part of the Chennai edition which covers the KTCC districts, the contest was organised across five Downtown zones, with 13 winners selected from each zone, taking the total number of winners to 65.

The winners were shortlisted after careful evaluation by the jury, with performance, creativity and overall presentation being key considerations. The presence of several children dressed as little Krishna and Radha added a special charm to the occasion, making the selection process particularly challenging for the jury.

After the winners were finalised, they were invited to the prize distribution ceremony along with their parents and family members. The event became an opportunity not only to recognise the young winners but also to celebrate the encouragement and support provided by their families.

The programme began on a graceful note with captivating classical music and dance performances by the talented students of AM Jain School. Their well-presented performances added a cultural touch to the celebration and were thoroughly en-

An initiative to recycle clay Ganeshas started by Teynampet resident Malini Kalyanam has impacted many resident groups in Chennai and beyond. Under the aegis of The PALM, headquartered in Tiruvallur, the 'Beautiful Bharat — Save Clay' drive has found volunteer groups across Tamil Nadu but supply is on the lower side," she says. Malini says the recycling project has been around for nearly a decade, but awareness has picked up considerably in recent years. With more people asking what they should do with their idols after the festival, the initiative has gradually expanded into a larger conversation about responsible celebration.

Malini, a Teynampet resident who has shifted her base to Tiruvallur for running The PALM, notes that the clay Ganesha idols recycling initiative, titled "Beautiful Bharat — Save Clay" powered by The PALM, has grown bigger, being pan-Tamil Nadu now as volunteers from across the state, which includes P.S. Jayaraman of SSM Nagar, are chipping in. Malini notes plans are afoot to extend the initiative to cities such as Mumbai and Hyderabad.

An extended and green Ganesha Chaturthi

At SSM Nagar in Alapakam, New Perungalathur, residents have been having an extended Ganesha Chaturthi for the last three years, making the clay Ganeshas central to a recycling initiative. As in the previous two years, under an in-house initiative, 'KAATRU' (Keeping Awareness And Action Towards Recycling and Upcycling), helmed by P.S. Jayaraman, has collected clay Ganeshas and kept them ready for potters.

Residents are asked to choose natural, unpainted clay idols and, after the celebrations, leave them at a designated collection point near the Pillayar Kovil. From there, the idols are handed over to potters.

P.S. Jayaraman, a resident of SSM Nagar, initiated this exercise three years ago inspired by a newspaper article about how Malini Kalyanam, pottery artist and environmentalist. "She was in Teynampet. There was a newspaper article saying that Ganesha idols need not be put into water and cause pollution, and that they could instead be given back to potters," he says. The article prompted Jayaraman to contact Malini, after which the community arranged for its idols to be collected and sent to potters.

The arrangement changed in the second year, when Jayaraman began looking for potters who could directly collect them from the community. "I looked on Google and contacted four or five potters inside Chennai," he says. Eventually, a potter near Kovalam connected him with another potter in Mahabalipuram, who agreed to collect the idols and reuse the material. "From the second year onwards, we started sending the idols directly to him. Last time, we sent around 900 to 1,000 Ganesas," Jayaraman says.

This year, around 200 to 250 idols had already been collected, with residents expected to continue bringing them in until the afternoon of September 19. Jayaraman has also been urging residents to think about their choices before the festival. The campaign asks them to avoid Plaster of Paris idols, non-eco-friendly paints and decorations. "I have been talking only about clay. I have been telling them not to buy painted Ganeshas or plaster Ganeshas," he says.

For Malini Kalyanam, who is Director of the Artistic Pottery Training Academy in Kattupakkam and one of the founders of The PALM, a public charitable trust, the issue goes beyond what happens to an idol after the festival. As a pottery artist, she has also watched the availability of natural clay decline. This year, her academy received enquiries from corporates as well as members of the public looking to purchase clay for Chaturthi workshops, only to find it difficult to source.

"This year we had enquiries from corporates and the public alike to purchase clay for Chaturthi workshops, and that is when they said it is not available online or even at shops in the locality. This shows that demand is high

An alternative application

Malini Kalyanam notes that if a collection facility or a potter is not available, the clay from the Ganesha idols can be used in tree-planting exercises. She suggests placing the idol in a bucket of water and letting it break down over a few days. Once the clay settles into a powder, it can be reused. However, Malini says, the clay should not simply be poured around a plant or sapling and expected to act as element of nourishment. For it to support plant growth, it needs to be mixed with other materials. She lists the ingredients that mixed with the clay that has dried up as a powder and found impressive results: garden soil, compost, perlite or sand, mushroom molasses and water. The ratio of the ingredients would depend on the sapling, she notes.

Month-long campaign on understanding dementia

Through the 'The Empty Chair', Dignity Foundation is beginning a conversation about dementia

Dignity Foundation is running a month-long campaign through "The Empty Chair" to create awareness on dementia. For most people, an empty chair simply means that someone is not there. But for a family living with dementia, an empty chair can carry a much deeper meaning. It reminds one of familiar conversations that has changed, a name that is no longer remembered, a daily routine that has become difficult, or a loved one whose world is gradually changing, says a note.

Through "The Empty Chair", the campaign is a reminder that dementia does not take away the person. They continue to have feelings, emotions, relationships, preferences and the need to be treated with respect. And, every empty chair has a story.

Dementia changes memory. It does not diminish a person's dignity, says the press release.

The campaign was launched at The Eye Foundation in Vadapalani and will be moving to other public spaces and institutions. The organisers want people to notice the chair, make them ask why it is there, and use that moment of curiosity to begin a conversation about dementia.

With personal interactions and a QR-enabled information experience, people are encouraged to understand dementia better, recognise its signs, learn how families are affected and discover how empathy, patience and support can make a difference, added the release.

Dignity Foundation also runs Dementia Day Care Centres, supporting persons living with dementia while providing families and caregivers.

Dignity Foundation invites corporates, colleges, hospitals, educational institutions and community organisations to bring The Empty Chair to their premises and become part of the campaign.

DAC launches luxury residences

DAC Developers, one of the city's leading construction companies, recently launched an ultra-luxury residential apartment project, Balmandaisa, on St. Thomas Mount-Poonamallee Road.

At the launch, the company held a logo-revealing ceremony at its Balmandaisa office.

The residential project offers expansive residences, premium amenities and strategic connectivity. It has 194 residences, offering two-and three-bedroom apartments and four-and five-bedroom duplex residences. The residences are complemented by a standalone ground-plus-three-floor clubhouse spanning 10,000 square feet, said a release.

The project comprises two basement levels, stilt, and 13 residential floors, creating a well-integrated residential community.

The homes are priced from ₹1.19 crore, added the release.

Sathish Kumar Santhanam, founder and managing director, DAC Developers; Kumar Vembu, founder, Mudhal Partners Private Limited and co-founder, Zoho; Hari Vignesh R, senior relationship manager, construction finance; Aditya Birla Housing Finance Limited, and Manjunath Selvamani, regional sales manager, Prime Home Loans, Aditya Birla Housing Finance Limited, took part.
