

metroPLUS

THE HINDU

What does it take to perfect the pickle?
Experts from Chennai tell us their secrets P2

ALL ABOUT SON OF THANJAI,
A ROOTED TAMIL GAME P4

Craft and colour (Clockwise from left) A jamakkalam at the Lakme Fashion Week 2025; bags from Indru; weavers from Bhavani; and MN Subhaz in a jamakkalam shirt. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

The many lives of the jamakkalam

As Bhavani's GI-tagged jamakkalams are being refashioned as bags, shirts and a slew of other products, we ask weavers what this wave of revival means to them

Akila Kannadasan
akila.k@thehindu.co.in

As the sun shoots past M Susheela, disappearing behind a clump of logs behind her. Seated on the mud floor, she continues to weave, chuckling at my panic. “Relax, it’s harmless,” she assures me, sliding the palm-sized shuttle through a sheet of cotton threads at the pit loom. “I’ve seen worse.” The threads – a combination of black and olive green – will take the shape of a jamakkalam that is part of an export order for her employer, Thillaiyappa Textiles.

It is unlike the colour scheme of the typical Bhavani jamakkalam, and signals a shift from tradition. Such experiments are commonplace at the thari kottagai where Susheela works. The space contains tile-roofed weaving sheds where 42 weavers work on 20 looms in Bhavani, 106 kilometres from Coimbatore. There are around 30 weaver cooperative societies in and around town that makes the GI-tagged jamakkalams, with nearly 200 weavers working in nearby villages such as Kuruppanaickenpalayam, Paruvachi, Anthiyur, and Periyamolapalayam.

Most of them are the last generation of weavers who have not passed on the skill to their children. “Jamakkalam is a niche product and something has to be done to change this,” says 28-year-old Thillaiyappa MN Subhaz, whose father K Nagarajan owns Thillaiyappa Textiles. Subhaz and his father, a master weaver, are trying to reinterpret the carpet with the help of their experienced team.

They make laptop bags, totes, sling bags, grocery bags, coasters, cushions, wall hangings and even shirts with jamakkalam. Subhaz supplies to several brands such as Inaki, and Koodai by Saras also selling on their own website and marketing themselves on social media.

Jamakkalam has been seeing a resurgence thanks to several brands over the past few years. Designer Vino Supraja, for instance, presented her collection Weave: A Bhavani Tribute at the London Fashion Week in 2025. She featured the bright stripes of the fabric in handbags, apart from western silhouettes made with patch-worked fabrics inspired by the rugs.

Then, there is Chennai-based Indru that makes chic handbags with jamakkalam, complete with leather trimmings and handles. Their bags are priced from ₹6,000. Artisanal art and craft brand The Dakshin Studio, also works with jamakkalam, featuring them in them in a collection of duffle bags in 2022. Ramraj Cotton too has come out with a range of the carpets done in combinations of purple, white, cream and yellow, also introducing totes in powder blue and yellow.

As someone who has seen first hand the fall of the jamakkalam, Subhaz wants to revive it. “People need to know that such a product exists,” he says, adding that for this to be the case, it has to be packaged differently. He regularly ships the carpets to the US, UK, Malaysia, and Singapore, and hopes to create a market for their other products as well. “If more orders come in, we will be able to offer better pay for our weavers,” he adds. They first started making grocery bags, and then got sling and laptop bags tailored in Bengaluru. “We wanted a premium finish and found someone who could offer that, although the end product worked out to be expensive,” says Subhaz.

Jamakkalam bags are quite the rage on social media with several brands selling them for prices that range from ₹2,700 to even ₹9,500. The weavers who created the base fabric, are unaffected by this trend. A Raju, a weaver, says, “None of this will help us unless we get better pay.”

The weavers make ₹15 to ₹16 for weaving one sq ft.

A Durairaj, a 71-year-old weaver, among their most experienced, weaves silk-bordered jamakkalams with ornate peacock and parrot motifs. The task requires precision and skill, something that Durairaj mastered when he was 17 years old. “I have taught 10 weavers this technique over the years and today, only three of them are alive,” he says. Silk jamakkalams make for exquisite wall décor and can also be framed. Subhaz is working with architectural firm such as Thinai to incorporate them in interior design.

On first glance, jamakkalam weavers appear to be at peace with the world, with just them and their threads and loom. But they are far tougher than they look – they stubbornly hold on to a line of work that refuses to improve their lives. Durairaj recalls how in 1972, they held one of their biggest strikes, with workers refusing to work unless they were given a hike of five paise.

Susheela says that the job has helped her raised her daughter. “I would tie a thottil on the wooden beam of the loom, and would rock the baby with one hand while I pushed the shuttle with the other,” she recalls.

Despite this perk, these men and women vow to never pull their children into their line of work. “Many looms went silent after people stopped weaving to take up jobs in textile companies in the surrounding towns,” she adds. Nagarajan adds that handwoven Bhavani jamakkalams also face stiff competition from cheaper powerloom ones from Solapur.

The latest line of products offers hope, albeit a dim one. Subhaz is constantly trying out new products; their pastel shirts, for instance, which were sold online, found lots of takers in Delhi, which Subhaz says can work for winter instead of woollens. Right now, though, many of these products are yet to reach the mainstream market. “Government support will give jamakkalams better visibility,” he says. He hopes to create a Government-recognised weaving cluster in which everything, right from weaving to packaging of the end product, is done under one roof. Will their innovations give a new lease of life to the weavers of Bhavani? Subhaz says: “We are willing to give this our best shot.”

Pride is political

In Chennai, a transformative coalition of queer individuals comes together for the annual Pride March on June 28

Sanjana Ganesh

sanjana.g@thehindu.co.in

In the first year of Chennai’s Pride March in 2009, held then on Marina’s sandy shores, placards demanding the right to exist and be acknowledged by the world, became one of the central demands. It was a self-respect movement that has since gained great momentum.

The Tamil Nadu Rainbow Coalition – an amalgamation of LGBTQIA+ organisations, activists, and volunteers, has not only aided the advocacy of policy to help the queer community gain marginal reservations in areas such as education and housing. It has also ensured that the rights of the queer community are not trampled on. When the latter has happened, the community has sounded the voices of protest, filed complaints, and chosen to take action.

The annual Rainbow Pride March on June 28 is going to be a celebration of years of efforts put into creating, and more importantly, sustaining a diverse community. If you have walked in one of those marches, you are sure to have experienced its vivid joy and energy.

Eighteen years after the first pride parade, Jaya, manager of Sahodaran, a non-governmental organisation, says, “Come be part of our joy. In it lies politics, colour, sloganeering, activism, conversation, learning, and a whole lot of dance,” she says. Jaya adds that just like the previous 17 editions, a talent show called Vannangal will be held a day before the march on June 27 at 5pm at the Corporation community hall in Amjikarai to welcome the community that has travelled from different parts of the State to be part of the pride parade. “It has been a space for members of the community to showcase their talent. We have had singers, dancers, poets, and writers from the community tell us the things they have been working on. We will also have a short briefing session on the following day’s March,” she says.

Ushering joy From a previous edition of the Rainbow Pride March in Chennai. B VELANKANNI RAJ

She adds that the next day starting 3.30pm at Rajarathinam Stadium, the queer community, often dressed to the nines, will be marching down the streets of Chennai. “We will have our allies, often senior members of the judiciary, or bureaucrats speaking to the community. It will end with another talent and fashion show,” she says. Jaya adds that on June 23, the Ripon Buildings was lit up for the Pride March. “We are looking forward to our interactions with Tamil Nadu’s new government formed by Tamilaga Vettri Kazhagam (TVK). We are hoping for our voices to be heard by the Centre and the State,” she adds.

BIGGEST DISCOUNT CLEARANCE SALE

BIGGEST

FURNITURE EXPO

UPTO 70% OFF

DATE : 26 | 27 | 28 JUNE 2026

VENUE : CHENNAI TRADE CENTRE
NANDAMBAKKAM, CHENNAI

• LIVING ROOM • DINING SET • BEDROOM SET • HOME DECOR PRODUCTS
• OUTDOOR FURNITURE • BRASS & ARTIFACTS • CARPET & CUSHIONS
• MATTRESSES • RECLINER SOFA SETS • WATER FOUNTAINS & MUCH MORE...

www.jadsandevents.com

exhibitions_jadsnvents

jadsnvents

ENTRY FREE ☎ +91 7448767203

AN EVENT BY

jads & events
COMPLETE BUSINESS SOLUTIONS

From the vegetable stalls of Mylapore to home kitchens across the city, seasoned picklers are preserving recipes and traditions that have been passed down generations

Brine and dandy

Chitradeepa Anantharam chitradeepa.a@thehindu.co.in

The air around South Mada Street is heavy with the scent of fresh turmeric, mango ginger and citrons. March and April are the peak months for vadu manga (also known as maavadu), with markets flooded with varieties of the tiny, unripe mangoes. Traditionally prepared without oil, they are made into pickle using turmeric, chilli powder, mustard seeds and salt in carefully balanced proportions.

A summer ritual in every jar
“I sell Thirumurthi mala vadu, a long variety, as well as urundai vadu from the Madurai region, Periyakulam vadu, Coimbatore vadu and Azhagarkoil vadu, which is greenish and round with red stems,” says M Mallika, 78, who has been selling vegetables near Chitrakulam in Mylapore for the past 60 years.
Along South Mada Street, vegetable vendors stock seasonal pickling ingredients during the summer months, including vadu manga, avakkai mangoes, kadaranga (kefir lime), narthangai (citron), lemons, manga inji (mango ginger), nellikkai (gooseberry), mahali kizhangu (an aromatic forest tuber that is widely used for pickling in South India) and fresh turmeric.

“This month, the focus has shifted to avakkai mangoes, most of which arrive from Andhra Pradesh. Although the vadu manga season is over, we can still source them for customers on request, albeit at a slightly higher price. Vadu manga from Kancheepuram and Vellore are expected over the next few weeks,” says Ezhil Arasi, whose shop is located on East Mada Street.
Ezhil says she has been selling about 100 kilograms of vadu manga a day during the peak season. Demand for avakkai mangoes also remains steady, with sales of nearly 10 to 25 kilograms a day.

Vendors offer to cut avakkai mangoes according to customer requirements, charging ₹40 per kilogram for the service.
S Prasanna, who learnt pickling from his mother and aunt, says he has made multiple batches of vadu manga pickle this season. “I usually visit the vendors near Chitrakulam to handpick my vadu manga and this year I bought 30 kg of Coimbatore vadu, a variety known for minimal shrinkage,” says Prasanna. He has also been making salted kadaranga (kefir lime) pickles and experimenting with a sweet-and-spicy mango pickle. “The recipe combines jaggery and spices to create a zingy flavour profile. We make avakkai pickles without garlic,” says Prasanna, who sources avakkai mangoes from a supplier in the Thiruvannmiyur market area.

Preserved through generations
In Besant Nagar, Sri Vidhya Coffee is known for its range of home-style pickles, podis and vadams. Its proprietor, octogenarian Vidhya Srinivasan, has a room lined with glass jars and plastic buckets filled with pickles. She is particularly popular for her vadu manga and garlic pickles.
“Until the pandemic, I would hire an autorickshaw and travel to the Mada Streets in Mylapore to source the ingredients. These days, however, my vendor delivers everything I need to my doorstep. Having been a loyal customer for over 40 years, I have never had to compromise on quality,” says Vidhya.
She adds, “Making avakkai pickle is a labour-intensive process. The mangoes must first be washed and shade-dried, then wiped clean and left overnight to ensure there is no

Spice and salt
Seasonal ingredients for traditional pickles, such as vadu manga, avakkai mangoes, citrons and mango ginger, are in demand as Chennai's annual pickling season is under way. B VELANKANNI RAJ brand name 101 Strawberries, Thamima Shamsuddin also prepares a range of pickles using lemon, mango, gooseberry, carrot and garlic. “I visit the Koyambedu wholesale market to source the best mangoes, lemons and amla during the season. Often, vendors alerts me when the finest-quality produce arrives,” says Thamima.

From vathals to pickles
Back in Mylapore, Mallika says customer patterns have been changing over the years. “From the 1960s until the late 1990s, customers would buy vegetables such as brinjal, cluster beans, green chillies and sundakkai (Turkey berry) in bulk during the summer months to prepare vathals and mor milagai for use during the rainy season. The process involved careful sun-drying over several days.
Today, with more women in the workforce and busier lifestyles, fewer households have the time to prepare and dry vathals at home. Instead, pickling has gained popularity because it is less time-consuming and requires little or no sun-drying. Once the ingredients are assembled, the pickling process can be completed within a few hours.”
As Chennai's summers grow hotter and lifestyles busier, the city's picklers continue to preserve more than just mangoes and lemons. In every bucket of avakkai lies a tradition, a family recipe, that has adapted with the times, yet remains deeply rooted in the season.

An ode to Chennai

Madras memories An artwork by late artist T Athiveerapandian. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

Priyamedha Dutta
priyamedha.dutta@thehindu.co.in

From the bustling bazaar streets and familiar neighbourhoods to personal memories and shared histories, Landscape of Belonging celebrates the many ways people see and connect with Chennai.
Presented by Madras Art Weekend at Lalit Kala Akademi in collaboration with The Hindu's Made of Chennai initiative, the exhibition puts a spotlight on the city's rich cultural heritage and bustling community.
Open to the public from June 27 to June 30, the exhibition begins with a preview on June 26 from 6pm onwards. Serving as a prelude to the annual Madras Day and Madras Month celebrations in August, the exhibition brings together a mix of emerging and established contemporary artists.
The exhibition will mark the artistic debut of several well-known personalities. Actor and filmmaker

Madras Art Weekend's Landscape of Belonging celebrates Chennai's many stories at Lalit Kala Akademi from June 27 to 30

Suhasini Maniratnam will present her work as a digital artist for the first time, while veteran actor, filmmaker and artist Sivakumar will also showcase his artworks. Filmmaker and screenwriter Pankaj Parashar will be exhibiting a selection of his digital creations, alongside works by senior artist G Raman.
On view will also be senior artist T Athiveerapandian's works, who passed away last year, offering audiences an opportunity to engage with his artistic legacy.
The exhibition explores themes of identity, heritage and belonging, reflecting on the idea of 'home' through the lens of Chennai's cultural landscape. “We received more than 500 submissions and had to narrow them down to just over 100 artists. The exhibition offers visitors an opportunity to experience a diverse range of mediums, from painting, photography to sculpture and digital art,” says Upasana Asrani, founder, Madras Art Weekend.
From June 27 to 30 at Lalit Kala Akademi. Entry is free.

Sangita Rajan
sangitarajan.pb@thehindu.co.in

As of Wednesday, a new lavender-and-purple pattern stretches across the facade of Chennai's Indira Nagar MRTS station.
Here, a peregrine falcon is depicted across one end. A Le Mans race car hurtles across another. At the centre is actor and racing driver Ajith Kumar, clad in gear, with the word “Unstoppable” plastered across the surface.
For weeks, commuters travelling down Rajiv Gandhi Salai have watched the mural slowly take shape. Alongside excitement, there is nostalgia for the artwork that stood here before it.
Five years ago, the same wall carried a very different story. Featuring 10 monochrome photographic half-face smiling portraits of regular Chennai citizens, the previous mural carried a message to destigmatise HIV/AIDS. An initiative by St+art India Foundation and Tamil Nadu State Aids Control Society along with Tidel Park and Southern Railway, it was an attempt to stop discrimination faced by people with Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV). Chennai-based graffiti writer and street artist A-Kill was commissioned to do the faces.
The new mural is a tribute to actor and racing driver Ajith Kumar's journey in motorsport. Commissioned as part of Campa Energy's Unstoppable Energy campaign, in collaboration with Mark Metro and Mudra OOH, the work has been creatively directed and illustrated by Karthik SS, with

Fresh paint (Left) Artists painting a new mural on the facade of Indira Nagar MRTS; (below) peregrine falcon by architect-muralist Ajith Kumar. SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT

If walls could talk

As a new mural rises on the Indira Nagar MRTS facade, Chennai debates the importance of public art

Chennai-based street artist A-Kill painting Ajith Kumar's portrait, Mumbai graffiti artist NME working on the Le Mans race car, and architect-muralist Ajith Kumar creating the peregrine falcon, all part of 108 Collective, a creative agency that does large scale murals.
It carries messages urging motorists to wear seatbelts, follow traffic rules and drive responsibly. Yet, as fresh coats of paint cover one of Chennai's most recognisable public artworks, the larger conversation is about the nature of public art and perception itself.
While some welcome the new artwork, others have questioned the loss of a mural that had become woven into the city's visual identity. For Karthik, who leads the project, the debate is as much about impermanence as it is about art. “The intention is to keep the conversation going. Today this is the conversation. After eight months or a year, it will be about something else,” he says.

Without understanding the whole process, the reaction becomes superficial, he says. “To paint a wall of this scale, there is the cost of maintaining it, the paint, equipment, manpower and permissions. The idea is to work with brands, but create something that people can engage with,” he says, adding that it took six months for this to come to life. Karthik argues that the debate often overlooks the realities of creating and maintaining large-scale public art. According to him, preparing the 63,000 sq ft wall alone cost over ₹10 lakh. The project currently employs 26 people, including 18 trained artists and several younger muralists being mentored through the collective.

Murals, unlike monuments, are rarely built to last forever. They fade, weather and, eventually, give way to new stories. The HIV/AIDS mural stood on the Indira Nagar MRTS facade for five years before making way for a new mural.
Whether this new artwork will earn the same place in the city's collective memory remains to be seen. But the reaction to its arrival has revealed something perhaps more significant: that Chennai has grown attached to its public art.

At the Chef's table
Food memories, travel discoveries, and seasonal ingredients come together in a new dining series at Firo. Conceived by culinary ideator Ajit Bangera and head chef Abhishek Mody, the monthly Chef's Edit offers an intimate tasting experience for just eight diners. Each edition reimagines familiar Indian flavours through a curated multi-course menu. The inaugural nine-course dinner is inspired by the transition from summer to monsoon, balancing seasonal produce with dishes shaped by memory and comfort. @Firo, RA Puram on June 25, Thursday evening. To reserve, contact 9384001434.

THE GUARDIAN QUICK CROSSWORD-59

- Across
7 Batter (6)
8 Powerful (6)
9 Withered (4)
10 Drinking spree (5-3)
11 Flow in drops (7)
13 Short musical composition (5)
15 Lick one's ____ (5)
16 Monosaccharide sugar (7)
18 Heating or cooling device (8)
19 Combustible mineral (4)
21 Refuge (6)
22 Relating to a horse (6)
Down
1 Horse-donkey cross (4)
2 Subtle (13)
3 Policeman (3,4)
4 Reel for thread (5)
5 Bacteria causing sore

To play The Guardian Quick Crossword, The Hindu Cryptic crossword, Sudoku & other puzzles online, scan the QR code.

- throat (13)
6 To a considerable degree (2,6)
12 Practise (8)
14 Fearful (7)
17 Artificial leg (5)
20 Skin disease (4)

Solution No.59

Who does not love a good evening or night out with great food? Imagine stepping away from the predictable menus we cycle through, and trying flavourful combinations you never thought could go together.

Driven by the philosophy that “there is no bad food, only personal preference,” he has

Experiments in flavour

The Lab, an evening resto cafe in Royapettah, offers experimental dishes distinct from the usual menu

Climbing up to the third floor reveals a dedicated rooftop area with a projector for screening live sporting

The menu hosts over 15 distinct premium burgers. Meat lovers can gravitate towards the godfather, a signature heavy-hitter which includes a chilli-cheese stuffed double beef patty layered with crisp onion rings and a pepper

The Lab Resto cafe is at 6, TTK Road, Royapettah. A meal for two costs between ₹700 and ₹1,000. For reservations, call 9003146526.

BIG3[®]

EXHIBITIONS

PRESENTS

THE ARCHITECT & INTERIOR EXPO 2026

OPENS TODAY
MUST VISIT

JUNE 2026

4
DAYS
EXPO

25
 THU

26
 FRI

27
 SAT

28
 SUN

FREE
ENTRY

HALL - 1, CHENNAI TRADE CENTRE,
NANDAMBAKKAM, CHENNAI

10.00 AM to 7.30 PM

120 COMPANIES

120 LEADING BRANDS

120+ PRODUCT DISPLAYS

7000+ VISITORS

*Conditions Apply / *Below 10 Years Age Children not allowed

Organized by BIG3 EXHIBITIONS

For Enquiry Call 98840 36873 / 74

www.big3exhibitions.com | f | @ / BIG3 EXHIBITIONS

SUPPORTED BY

9884036873
 (Reg No. 3462001)

PAGE 3

LUXURY SALON & MAKEOVER STUDIO

Her Big Day, Our Big Responsibility

BRIDAL BEAUTY THAT SHINES TOGETHER
BECAUSE EVERY BRIDE DESERVES HER TRIBE.

5 REASONS WHY BRIDES CHOOSE PAGE 3 SALON

EXPERT BRIDAL TEAM

Specialists in bridal beauty
& care

PERSONALISED LOOKS

Tailored to match your style &
wedding vibe

PREMIUM PRODUCTS

Luxury products
for a flawless,
long-lasting glow

TRIALS & PLANNING

stress-free trials
& full pre-wedding
grooming salon services

COMPLETE BRIDAL CARE

From skin to saree draping we handle it all

Bridal Glam. Bestie Squad. Beautiful Memories

WE CARE FOR YOUR ENTIRE BRIDAL JOURNEY

BRIDAL
MAKEUP

HAIR
STYLING

SAREE DRAPING &
LEHENGA STYLING

MEHENDI
LOOKS

RECEPTION
GLAM

PRE-WEDDING
SHOOT LOOKS

BRIDE & BRIDEMAIDS PACKAGES AVAILABLE

Because your glow is better when shared!

01 CONSULTATION

We understand your vision &
wedding vibe

02 CUSTOMISED

Beauty plan for you & your squad

03 EXPERT EXECUTION

Flawless hair,
makeup &
styling

04 TRIALS & PRE BRIDAL SERVICES

Perfecting every detail together

05 UNFORGETTABLE EXPERIENCE

Making your memories even more special

FOR FRANCHISE
ENQUIRY

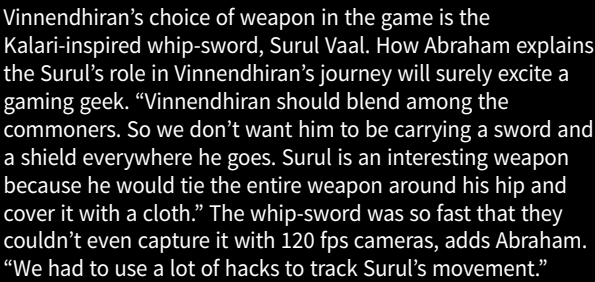

97910 97432

Alwarpet : 98402 09000 | Besant Nagar : 73387 22296 | Velachery : 78455 40793 | Sholinganallur : 63851 89336 | KNK : 98845 44012
MRC Nagar : 99406 58321 | Mogappair : 73050 90085 | Anna Nagar : 72008 09809 | Saligramam : 96009 65796 | Kilpauk : 73974 77777
VR Chennai : 96004 85499 | Adyar : 78456 05535 | T Nagar : 98845 44097 | Thoraipakkam : 73977 70676

Behind Son of Thanjai, the Tamil game that promises to revolutionise Indian gaming

Ever since PlayStation and Xbox dropped the game's now-trending promos, the attention of the global gaming community has rightfully turned towards India. Set in the 11th Century Chola dynasty, the gameplay takes place in an eight-kilometre area around the iconic Brihadeeswara Temple in Tanjore. Players get into the shoes of Vinnendhiran, a fictional Chola prince inspired by Rajendra Chola.

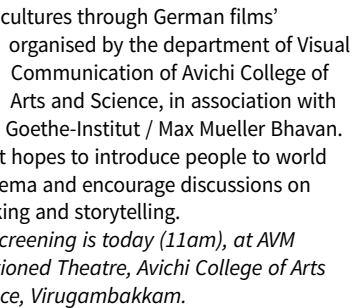

Abraham's vision to create a Tamil game about the Cholas began long before Son of Thanjai. His team worked on a demo version called Unsung Empires: The Cholas, which was released on Steam.

MADHAN KARKY, Writer

The developer adds, “We chose the Cholas because they’re one of the most documented kings, and we want our players to experience a new world and its mechanics.” While that excited Madhan, he knew making it a story on Rajendra Chola would restrict them tremendously. “Whatever is documented in history was all that we’d have been able to tell. But especially because it’s going to be a different world – and a violent world – for Madhan adds, “Whenever I go travelling, and people realise I am from India, they start talking to me in Hindi. This game is an opportunity to tell the world that there’s more to India than what they see. I love playing games in the native language because it takes me into a new world more naturally. Now, I want the world to experience Tamil culture.”

The Piano
Buffet Restaurant

Summer Fest

MEAL DEAL

1st May - 30th June | Lunch & Dinner
INR 2100 Nett per person
Except Sunday Brunch

COME AS 5 PAY FOR 3 COME AS 3 PAY FOR 2

Wide Spread Buffet, Lassi Counter,
Sarbath Counter, Chaat Counter,
Pizza & Pasta Counter, Magic Show,
Caricature, Tattoo Art, Face Painting and More..

For reservations, call 7550001168

SAVERA HOTEL, 146, Dr. Radhakrishnan Road, Chennai 600004
T: 28114700 | f / Saverahotel

*T&C apply

THE SAVERA
HOTELS & RESTAURANTS