New bar codes

With immersive architecture, India’s watering holes are using design, light, and materiality to shape experience

Rashmi Gopal Rao

Walking into any of the recently designed watering holes is like entering into an immersive environment where architecture, lighting, music, and cocktails come together to create a thematic narrative that is as interesting as it is unique. These high-character spaces are defined by the generous use of bold colour palettes, art, handcrafted elements, and thematic storytelling. Unlike many other hospitality spaces, a bar must simultaneously operate as a place for social interaction, performance, and personal moments.

Key trends

One of the most important considerations while designing a bar is circulation and spatial planning. “A well-planned layout ensures that movement remains fluid and intuitive, even during peak hours. The bar counter itself becomes the central anchor of the space,” says Manav Dang, principal architect of New Delhi’s Studio Dang.

Bar design in 2026 is increasingly driven by experience and storytelling. Rather than creating neutral interiors, designers are focusing on specific themes, whether it is a city-based theme, a design inspired by a specific structure, such as a gothic mountain chalet, or even a nostalgic theme.

Rusty reverie

No Vacancy, Studiio Dangg, New Delhi

No Vacancy, spanning 1,500 sq. ft., is set within a long, narrow site, a spatial condition that became the starting point for the design concept. “The narrative of the space draws inspiration from the aesthetics of an industrial steel tube, combining the atmosphere of an experimental laboratory with the informality of a dive bar,” says Dangg. The colour palette is warm and earthy, mainly due to the use of corten steel, which gives the walls and ceiling a rich, textured finish in deep rust and brown hues. This warmth is balanced with the use of stainless steel across key elements such as the bar counter, shelving, and ceiling details. The contrast between these two materials (corten steel and stainless steel) creates a clear visual language. “The flooring is laid in a herringbone pattern, adding a layer of detail and directionality underfoot while staying within the same warm tonal family. Stainless steel elements, including the bar front and ceiling spine, reflect light and movement, making the space feel more dynamic,” states Dangg. “Acrylic panels with embedded mesh at the bar introduce another layer of texture while maintaining the industrial character. Basically, every element supports the elongated volume, which becomes the central narrative of the design.”

Gothic glow

Luna Et Sol, Jade Design Studio, Mumbai

Luna Et Sol, a 3,400-sq.ft. bar, is conceived as a gothic mountain chalet transported straight into the heart of Mumbai. “The name translates to ‘The Moon and The Sun’ in Latin, and the space has been designed to allow guests to witness the passage of time through an ever-changing sky. A custom overhead screen simulates daylight transitioning to dusk and night,” says Vaishali Singh, co-founder, Jade Design Studio, Mumbai. The semi-elliptical bar offers guests clear views of a curated drinks display that resembles an old-world cellar, evoking heritage and ritual.

The overall design draws from the visual and emotional language of Gothic mountain architecture – think pitched vaulted roofs, tall Gothic windows, stone-clad walls, and wrought-iron details. The palette is inspired by natural materials and earthy tones of alpine interiors “Wrought-iron chandeliers and suspended candle lights fill the double-height volume with gentle, warm pools of illumination,” says co-founder Anshul Razdan.

“Instead of uniformly lighting the space, designers often introduce soft ambient lighting combined with focused highlights that accentuate architectural features, bottle displays, and seating areas. Acoustic performance also plays a critical role, especially in bars that host live performances or DJ sets,” adds Dangg. Thus, materials, surfaces, and spatial planning must help manage sound levels so that the music enhances the atmosphere without overwhelming conversation.

There is an increase in the use of long benches, shared seating arrangements, and extended bar counters that facilitate interaction among guests. And atmospheric lighting, which uses strategic pools of light to highlight specific elements while leaving other areas in shadow, is in vogue. “Ultimately, the design should communicate a coordinated narrative while delivering comfort, efficiency, and a calibrated energy that evolves through the day and night,” says Bilal Ghaswala, AVP projects, Impresario Hospitality Group, Mumbai. “Micro-details, custom graphics, joinery, furniture, and lighting fixtures all help anchor the identity and elevate memorability.”

So, here are some recently designed avant-garde watering holes.

The idea of what an office should be is undergoing a quiet but decisive change. No longer defined by rows of desks and secluded cabins, offices are increasingly being reimagined as spaces that prioritise experience, comfort and human interaction, borrowing heavily from the world of hospitality.

According to JLL's 2025 Experience Matters research, nearly two-thirds of people globally now expect the spaces where they live, work and spend time to offer enjoyment, variety and meaningful value. That expectation is fast reshaping how companies think about office design, especially in India, where the concept of 'hotelification' is gaining traction. This trend reflects a broader rethinking of the workplace: not as a fixed piece of infrastructure but as a service. Employers are recognising that the physical environment plays a critical role in influencing how people feel, collaborate and perform. As a result, offices are beginning to resemble boutique hotels or high-end lounges, where aesthetics and functionality are equally important.

Offices learn from hotels

Design, amenities and service culture transform professional spaces

As early adopters of hospitality-led design, flexible workspace operators have long focused on creating environments that combine functionality with experience – offering everything from thoughtfully designed common areas and community programming to concierge-like services and premium amenities. In many ways, coworking spaces have served as live prototypes for what the modern office could become, influencing even large enterprises to rethink their own workplaces. Their emphasis on flexibility, community and service has set new benchmarks, pushing the broader office market towards more human-centric, experience-driven design.

Behind this shift lies a growing body of evidence linking employee experience to business outcomes. Research by McKinsey & Company suggests that improving employee wellbeing could unlock as much as $11.7 trillion in global economic value. Meanwhile, a study by Gallup found that organisations with highly engaged employees report 41% lower absenteeism, 17% higher productivity, and 21% higher profitability.

Beyond desk

For companies, the message is increasingly difficult to ignore: investing in employee experience is not just a cultural decision. It is a financial one. In a competitive talent market, the workplace itself has become a differentiator, shaping recruitment, retention and even brand perception.

This growing focus on employee experience is also reflected in the introduction of thoughtful workplace amenities and engagement initiatives. Beyond infrastructure, there is a stronger push towards community and wellbeing through curated programs like Zumba sessions, and lifestyle and health-related initiatives that encourage a more balanced work routine. At the same time, safety remains a priority, with regular fire and safety mock drills being conducted to ensure preparedness and build a secure work environment.

Hospitality to the rescue

This is where the influence of the hospitality sector becomes particularly relevant. Hotels have long mastered the art of designing spaces around human needs, focusing on seamless experiences, from intuitive layouts and quick connectivity to personalised services. Offices are now borrowing these principles, incorporating features such as concierge-style services, flexible seating and curated food options. The goal is not to blur the line between work and leisure, but to remove friction from the work-day. When employees can move easily between focused work, collaboration and relaxation, productivity tends to follow naturally. The office, in this sense, becomes less about presence and more about purpose. In India, where office attendance is steadily normalising, companies are responding by re-designing spaces to make them more inviting and meaningful. The emphasis is on creating environments that support both individual performance and collective culture. Ultimately, the hotelification of offices signals a deeper shift in how work itself is understood.

Employee wellbeing and experience are no longer peripheral concerns or discretionary spending items. They are central to how organisations compete and grow. In the modern workplace, the office is no longer just a place to work, it is a space designed to make work better.

Terracotta mood

Baar Bar, Goa

Baar Bar sits within the Pincode Bungalow in Goa, and the space is replete with a warm, dim, and textural vibe. “There’s a strong terracotta palette running through the walls, layered with subtle detailing that gives it depth without making it feel busy. The bar counter is long and grounding, finished in wood with a soft amber glow underneath that adds warmth without being harsh. Lighting is kept low through pendant fixtures and diffused sources, creating a slightly cinematic feel across the room,” says Sushree Vaish, creative director, Baar Bar. Seating moves between bar stools and more relaxed tables along the wall, giving people the option to engage or step away. Materials are intentionally not over-polished. Plaster, wood, and a vinyl set-up come together to make the space feel lived-in rather than styled. All this makes the space more intimate and personal rather than invoking a high-energy vibe. “Working within a restored bungalow helped, as instead of overriding it, we leaned into it and let the existing structure guide the design decision,” adds Vaish.

Royal recast

KAI Bar and Kitchen, Maze Concept Design, Bengaluru

Kai, an 8,000-sq.ft. rooftop bar, is located 13 floors above Bengaluru’s MG Road. The core concept revolves around reinterpreting the grandeur of Indian palaces into a contemporary setting. Instead of relying on ornamentation, the design distils royal architecture into proportion, symmetry, spatial hierarchy, and material richness, creating a modern-day “durbar” experience. “The space is defined by a rich yet controlled palette of deep maroons, reds, coppers, and bronzes, balanced with the warmth of walnut wood. A sculptural ceiling inspired by a peacock feather forms the visual focal point. Indian Patent Stone (IPS) flooring with marble inlays subtly guides movement, while custom wallpapers and recurring motifs unify the interiors,” says Priyanka M.C., co-founder, Maze Concept Design Studio, a Bengaluru-based architecture firm. “Lighting plays a dynamic role with programmable LED strips embedded in the ceiling, shifting the mood from warm and refined in the early evening to vibrant and reflective at night.”

The uniqueness lies in its abstraction of palace architecture rather than literal replication, adds co-founder Koushik B. R. “The central bar acts as a courtyard-like nucleus, organising the entire layout with symmetry. The peacock feather-inspired ceiling, dynamic lighting transitions, and seamless integration of indoor and semi-outdoor spaces stand out as key highlights,” he says.

Urban harmony

Bar Sama, StudioGrain, Bengaluru

Sama, which loosely translates to equal or balance in Kannada, is spread across 1,800 sq.ft. “We envisioned the design as an inner and outer core with many alcoves and nooks that encourage intimacy and conversation. There was a clear intent to create a cocktail bar that feels nostalgic yet balanced in Bengaluru’s evolving identity,” says Pronoti Chhabbi, principal architect of Bengaluru-based StudioGrain. The outer core, which is also known as the dining room, reflects the old soul of the city, while the inner core is a representation of present-day Bengaluru and exudes a bold, urban, energetic and experimental vibe.

While the former is layered in muted shades of dusty blue and natural greens, the inner core takes on a dramatic shift into intense charcoal and rich cobalt, setting a bold, immersive tone for the bar. The outer section has Art Deco grills and vintage framed pictures and offers a view of the trees outside. The inner section has a moody, contemporary vibe with saturated hues and a charcoal grey granite-topped bar anchoring the space.
