India's green factory gap

When a Japanese multinational technology company announces that its factory in Osaka runs on floating solar panels on an adjacent reservoir, global sustainability indices take note. But when a California-based EV battery manufacturer's auto component plant in Pune converts entirely to rooftop solar system (RTS), generating 545 MWh annually and meeting 100% of its energy needs, or the Panipat textile cluster in Haryana, India's recycling capital, begins its nascent adoption of renewables amid its push towards a low-carbon circular economy, it is often viewed simply as operational efficiency.

The difference does not lie in its intent or performance, but in the architecture of recognition. In a world where supply chains are increasingly carbon-accounted, capital flows are ESG-sensitive and disclosures influence valuation, the ability to certify, standardise and credibly communicate green-manufacturing capability will determine competitiveness.

For India, aspiring to be a global manufacturing hub, the stakes are even higher. This is no longer just an environmental conversation, it is an economically imperative.

Industry's climate dilemma

As the world's third-largest emitter of greenhouse gases, accounting for approximately 7%-8% of global emissions as reported by Climate Change Tracker, India is also one of the fastest-growing manufacturing economies, with an industrial output projected to expand around 8.64% CAGR between 2025 and 2035, according to the Market Research Future report by Spherical Insights & Consulting. This creates a structural dual mandate, which is to industrialise at scale while reducing emissions intensity in a disciplined and structured manner.

Meeting this mandate requires a framework that reflects Indian realities, including energy tariffs that vary significantly across states. It also considers that more than half of India's land area faces high to extremely high water stress, according to India Water Tool 2.0. Manufacturing supply chains are also deeply localised and (MSME)-dominated.

A green factory in India, therefore, cannot be a derivative of European design principles. It must be engineered around Indian economic, climatic and demographic conditions.

Frameworks

The country maintains green building and energy-efficiency foundations through certifications such as the Confederation of Indian Industry's Indian Green Building Council (IGBC), the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy-backed Green Rating for Integrated Habitat Assessment (GRIHA), Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED), the Bureau of Energy Efficiency's Star Rating programme, and CII's Green-Co Rating System.

More significantly, India's manufacturing sectors are demonstrating measurable commitment. Rooftop solar adoption across manufacturing clusters has grown and circular economy practices, including material recycling and waste heat recovery, are being adopted widely.

Yet, unlike developed markets where a single sustainability benchmark often enjoys global recognition and investor confidence, India's green factory certification remains distributed across multiple frameworks. They are robust, but they do not yet operate as a unified national signal in global capital markets.

As a result, thousands of manufacturing units, particularly among India's 6.5 crore registered MSMEs that contribute roughly 31.1% of GDP and employ millions as reported by IBEF, undertake, or are keen on, meaningful decarbonisation and water stewardship initiatives without fully capturing their economic value.

Certification paradox

The consequence is a paradox, where operational sustainability advances faster than institutional recognition. India's domestically developed frameworks such as GRIHA and IGBC, while rigorous and contextually appropriate, carry limited legibility with global sustainability indices and international investors, who largely default to LEED as the only internationally recognised benchmark among India's suite of certifications.

So, what must an Indian 'green factory' framework address?

Globally, green factories are perceived as facilities designed to minimise environmental impact through renewable energy use, efficient resource management, and reduced emissions. In India, however, the definition must extend further to include capital accessibility, resilience to water stress and scalability for MSMEs. Simultaneously, with India's manufacturing ambition, under initiatives such as Make in India and production-linked incentive (PLI) schemes, coinciding with global supply chains actively seeking low-carbon production hubs, a clearly defined Indian 'green factory' framework should reflect these realities.

Apart from being measured on parameters such as energy efficiency, water stewardship, waste management and carbon reduction, sustainability is, increasingly, also tied to disclosure requirements such as the Business Responsibility and Sustainability Reporting (BRSR), which mandates ESG reporting for top listed entities in India.

A redefined Indian green factory framework must be assessed not only by environmental metrics, but also by its capacity to attract sustainable capital, enhance export competitiveness, mitigate long-term energy risk, and strengthen climate resilience. In today's context, sustainability is inseparable from strategic positioning.

To build globally competitive green manufacturing, India needs a multi-layered approach in which the evolution of a factory into a green factory becomes part of a larger national blueprint. The kind that integrates renewable energy, digital intelligence, credible certifications, and MSME inclusion into a cohesive industrial identity.

The country's industrial policymakers must come together to establish a unified, India-specific green factory rating system. A framework that reflects its unique landscape and demands in terms of scale, its diversity and its ambition. Because an Indian green factory does not have to look like the one in Denmark to be called 'green' to earn global respect. This nation must define green manufacturing on its own terms.

That, ultimately, is the foundation of an enduring industrial leadership.

Mid-range housing

The RBI's current 5.25% repo rate establishes an unambiguous message that home loans have become more accessible. Developers experience project delivery acceleration because their financial expenses have decreased which results in their need for less construction materials. Buyers experience decreased monthly payment amounts which motivates undecided customers to make purchasing decisions. The current situation does not represent a market surge but rather a planned market restoration. Mid-range housing prices will continue to rise steadily while luxury housing prices require additional time to develop. The actual situation shows that people can afford more now because interest rates remain unchanged which eliminates the fear of sudden interest rate increases.

RBI keeps key rate steady

Commercial

The 5.25% interest rate provides office buildings with improved operational efficiency. Corporations prefer to secure their leases immediately because lower capital expenses make their leasing costs more affordable. The current hybrid work environment prevents businesses from returning to their former office needs although some people will eventually return to work. Companies will focus on cost reduction which will lead to increased demand for Grade A buildings located in tier-2 cities. The current interest rate enables commercial mortgage-backed securities refinancing which provides the market with additional funds. The current repo rate demonstrates commercial real estate sector operations because it offers investors stable pathways to grow their businesses through controlled development.

SUDHIR A. PATEL
Director of Shyam Group

Retail

The retail industry depends on customer feelings because the 5.25% repo rate indicates people should shop with restraint instead of spending freely. The decrease in interest rates enables people to pay lower EMIs for their personal and vehicle loans which results in increased available money. The banks that exercise caution will begin to enforce stricter credit score requirements which creates disadvantages for some people. The retail real estate market which includes malls and high streets presents a divided situation. More people visit stores because their spending capacity increases but online shopping continues to compete strongly. The winning move? Experiential retail. Retailers maintain their capacity for controlled business growth because they currently manage all their debts.

Warehouse

Warehousing operates best when it maintains consistent interest expense levels. The logistics industry can now establish automated facilities because the current 5.25% repo rate protects them from interest rate changes. E-commerce and quick-commerce services require urban markets to have their delivery centres positioned close to residential communities. Lower rates also attract institutional investors to warehousing as an asset class, pushing up lease rates in prime locations. The land acquisition costs present a warning that it brings higher expenses. The operational rate provides an advantage for business operations but it does not increase land value. The 5.25% interest rate provides warehouse developers with permission to construct grade-A sheds throughout the Delhi-Mumbai freight corridor and Chennai-Bengaluru region.

ZAFEER AHMED
Managing director, XRE Consultants

Land parcels

The most interest-sensitive real estate investment exists in land. The vacant land holding costs decrease to 5.25% repo rate yet this decrease does not drive investors to purchase land. Investors use price signals to determine market movement instead of relying on interest rate changes. The developers who possess substantial financial resources can now acquire multiple land parcels which they will use in their upcoming development plans for urban areas situated beyond city centres. The agricultural land transformation into non-agricultural land receives financial support through affordable credit which funds both approval processes and required payments. The land registries will experience a gradual increase during the next six-month period.

AMAN GUPTA
Director of RPS Group

Infrastructure

The core infrastructure system operates as a foundation which receives a minor adjustment through the application of 5.25% repo rate. The lower interest rates enable organisations to obtain bonds and bank loans for their road and port and power project funding needs. India faces infrastructure problems that extend beyond interest costs because the country struggles with project execution and land acquisition. The current rate enables state-owned enterprises and private concessionaires to replace their high-cost debts because it reduces their financing expenses while allowing them to maintain their operations and compete for new contracts. The National Infrastructure Pipeline receives a small increase in its funding. The 5.25% rate will maintain existing projects which require urgent cash until they achieve operational status while it will not initiate any new project development.

VIJAY RAUNDAL
Managing director of Teerth Realities

Investment

The 5.25% repo rate creates fresh chances for real estate investors. The fixed deposit investments lost their appeal because investors started seeking higher returns which led them to purchase residential and commercial and warehousing properties. The market currently lacks a 2008-style euphoria because banks maintain their strict lending practices while keeping their loan-to-value ratios at low levels. Investors will concentrate on properties which generate 6% to 7% net rental income because these assets will provide them with a minor profit advantage. The new investment money will flow into REITs and Infrastructure Investment Trust (InvITs) because their distribution rates exceed their debt payment rates.

Reimagining a chess set

Young Designers India reinterprets the country’s ancient game through sculptural forms, architectural references and experimental materials

Anisha Menezes

Board games are getting a designer makeover. Think Fendi’s Roma Tower – a glammed-up Jenga set – and Tiffany & Co.’s luxurious backgammon set, both launched in 2025. Together, they raise a playful question: can board games be fun and look like a million bucks too? Taking a cue from these international ateliers, Young Designers India (YDI), a group of designers of Indian origin but spread across the globe, have put their stamp on the chess set. Two iterations reimagine the materiality, form and storytelling of chaturanga (predecessor of chess), crafted as collectibles, for those who enjoy the savoir faire of a well-made chess set. YDI was started as an online community on Instagram around 2020 by Sushant Vohra, a Seattle-based industrial designer. “Our community of around 16,000 members regularly conducts design experiments. In a pilot last year, we offered designers a chance to work in a studio-style setting and get different resource people from across the world. The brief was simple: create an object through the lens of modern India,” explains Vohra. The chess project was part of YDI’s first ‘Community Project’ initiative. Supported by Teague (a Seattle-based design consultancy) and Figma (a cloud-based collaborative design tool), the initiative was structured as a typical studio-style design project, with YDI generating over 1.2 million impressions (digital content was displayed on screens 1.2 million times). Two teams creating chess sets, titled Moh Maya and Aakaar, had a lead designer and two to three creatives each, tasked with generating ideas and handling execution. “The emphasis was not just on the final artefact, but on the dialogue, iteration, and decision-making that shaped it. In that sense, every project evolved into a live case study in collaboration, authorship, and taste,” says Vohra.

The chess sets: Moh Maya (illusion) and Aakaar (form) celebrate materiality, architectural styles and philosophies but with a modernist interpretation.

The freelance writer is based in Chennai.

Aakaar

Designers: Udhbav Bharadwaj, Ritviz Sharma, Shubham Modgi, Aditya Mehra

“This chess set returns to the ideologies and materials used when chaturanga was formed. Terracotta and bronze have been central to the subcontinent, transcending hierarchy from labourer to king. The result is a design that curates rather than abandons history, finding unity in diversity through disciplined form,” explains New York-based freelance industrial designer Udhbav Bharadwaj.

Terracotta with metal accents celebrate the soil, while bronze was chosen for its corrosion-resistant nature and ability to fuse into any material seamlessly. The chessboard’s slightly raised playing surface mimics the rhythm of stepwells, while the flat borders recall the quiet restraint of stone courtyards. Each square has a sunken bronze star that catches the light. The board features 49 full stars and 28 half-stars, a subtle nod to the 28-day lunar cycle. The pieces are created with intent and architectural tension. The pawn’s spherical head is inverted to create a cavity that allows a single metal sphere to crown it upon promotion during play. The chariot has a top carved with four controlled cuts with a hollowed cavity beneath as a quiet homage to the vimanas of the Ramayana. The knight marries terracotta and bronze, with the body fashioned from a monolithic cylinder of terracotta with two bronze plates, cast using the traditional lost-wax method. The bishop (imagined as an elephant) is formed from a bronze core with a terracotta shell, pored, shaped, and aged by hand. Finally, the king is inspired by the turbans and sarpech of Mughal emperors, Punjabi maharajas, and Sikh leaders.

The queen’s tiara holds a subtle cavity, mirroring, in exact form, the crown jewel set at the front of the king’s headpiece.

Moh Maya chess set and (bottom) Tanay Vora.

Moh Maya

Designers: Tanay Vora, Vidushi Gupta, Yaman Gupta, Hardik Sharma

“For too long, Indian design has been seen through a narrow lens – nostalgic, ornamental, or folkloric. Each piece of Moh Maya feels like a tiny building – sculptural, geometric, and rooted in the spirit of Indian modernism. The movement that shaped so much of India’s mid-century architecture – raw concrete, strong lines, bold geometry – inspires the language of the set,” explains Salzburg-based industrial designer Tanay Vora.

The chessboard is tiered with the pawns beginning on a lower plane.

The central battleground rises, while the back row holding the king and queen ascends. The shifts in elevation allow you to add drama to each move. The king is inspired by the steps of the temple, the tiered top is an allusion of the steep path to royalty while the queen takes its form from the iconic Jantar Mantar, the knight from B.V. Doshi’s Tagore Memorial Hall, and the pawn has a cut at the back, symbolising its ability to only move forward.

While there has been quite a buzz around the sets, “with some high-profile chess players from Tamil Nadu showing interest, the projects are currently still in the prototyping phase. We are evaluating the possibility of releasing limited editions that preserve the conceptual and material integrity of the original designs”, concludes designer Sushant Vohra.
