Green roofs for Chennai

The city confronts extreme weather through vegetation-led design, community effort, and adaptive planning

Durganand Balsavar

The rising heat in Tamil Nadu and across India is beginning to worsen the environment. In 2025, The Hindu reported that mercury levels peaked at 39.2°C and 39.7°C in Nungambakkam and Meenambakkam, respectively. The series of summer forecasts issued by the India Meteorological Department indicates a surge in heatwaves across the country in April. Similar conditions are expected to follow in subsequent months, calling for a broader programme of tree planting, lake rejuvenation, park and open space design, and green roofs.

Of the many initiatives to mitigate the harsh impact of heatwaves, the green roof concept lends itself to citizen participation. For several decades now, apartment terraces in Chennai have been a largely derelict space.

NATURE.

SPR CITY HOMES ARE UP TO 9.2°C COOLER
THAN GROUND-LEVEL CHENNAI.*

When the city below is turning up the heat, homes above the 20th floor at SPR City Residences enjoy uninterrupted breeze and open surroundings that help keep things cooler through the year. With large balconies, no neighboring high-rises blocking the wind, there's less dependence on air-conditioning, and more relief from Chennai's heat - naturally.

"Living here truly feels like resort-style living. The fresh air and scenic views are a refreshing change - something we were missing earlier. Even during peak Chennai summer, it feels noticeably cooler here. The podium area is one of the highlights. It's always breezy, with a pleasant sea wind that makes walking there incredibly refreshing and calming. From indoors to outdoor, the amenities are thoughtfully designed and make it easy to maintain a healthy and active lifestyle."
Mr. Deepak S
14th Floor, SPR CITY

"The first thing I noticed was the panoramic city skylines and beautiful sunset from my balcony. The lack of noise from street traffic or people passing in hallways provides a secluded and secure feeling. We receive lot of natural light and strong breeze which reduces the use of electricity."
Mr. Mukesh K H
39th Floor, SPR CITY

"Living on the 28th floor at SPR City has changed how we start every day. We moved from the 1st floor to the 28th, and the first morning on the balcony - sea view, hot tea, and a breeze that feels brand new - was pure wow. It's not just the height; it's the light, the quiet, and the air. Even in Chennai's summer, daytime AC is barely needed. From habit to happiness, this high-rise life made our everyday feel like a getaway."

A Space Marketing Initiative

Our Power, Our Planet:

Building Chennai's Greener Tomorrow, One Home at a Time

Earth Day 2026 brings Chennai's rising heat and shrinking water tables into focus, depicting how the homes we build today determine how sustainably, and comfortably, we live tomorrow.

Siddhi Nawar

On a humid Chennai afternoon, when ceiling fans hum against the weight of the heat and the promise of rain lingers just out of reach, the idea of "power" takes on a deeply personal meaning. It is not just about electricity, but about agency; the choices we make in shaping the spaces we inhabit. This year's World Earth Day theme, Our Power, Our Planet, resonates strongly with a city that has learned, often the hard way, that sustainability is no longer optional—it is essential.

For Chennai's homebuyers, builders and planners, the conversation around real estate is steadily shifting. What was once centred on location, price and amenities is now expanding to include water security, energy efficiency and climate resilience. And rightly so. In a city where nearly a quarter of its neighbourhoods are now estimated to fall under high heat-stress zones, the built environment is a determinant of everyday comfort and survival.

In this context, "power" is as much about solar panels as it is about informed decisions. Across the city, a growing number of residential developments are integrating rooftop solar systems, not as a luxury add-on but as a practical response to rising energy costs and environmental concerns. For individual homeowners too, the shift is visible—solar water heaters and energy-efficient appliances are becoming commonplace, driven by both awareness and long-term savings.

Zoom out, and this shift is not just local; it reflects a broader transformation underway across India's real estate sector. Today, green building practices span over 15 billion square feet nationwide, with thousands of projects aligned to sustainability standards. These aren't symbolic gestures; collectively, such buildings are already saving billions of litres of water and significantly reducing carbon emissions each year. It is a reminder that when scaled, small design choices can translate into large environmental gains.

Back in Chennai, water remains the city's most defining challenge; and increasingly, its greatest driver of change. Rainwater harvesting, once enforced as regulation, is now embraced as a necessity. Developers are investing in advanced water management systems, from greywater recycling to landscaping that reduces groundwater dependency. For residents, these are no longer invisible features;

they are tangible markers of a future-proof home.

Yet, the story of sustainable real estate is not just about infrastructure; it is also about design. Architects in Chennai are revisiting traditional wisdom, blending it with modern needs. Homes that maximise cross-ventilation, reduce heat gain through shaded facades, and incorporate natural materials are quietly redefining what it means to live comfortably in a tropical climate. In many ways, this is less an innovation and more a return to practices that were always suited to the region, now viewed through the lens of sustainability. There is also a growing awareness that green living extends beyond the walls of a home. Gated communities are beginning to integrate green spaces not just as aesthetic features, but as functional ecosystems. Native plants, tree-lined avenues and community gardens are helping restore a sense of balance in an otherwise dense urban fabric. These spaces do more than beautify—they cool the surroundings, improve air quality and foster a sense of shared responsibility among residents.

Of course, challenges remain. Sustainable construction can come with higher upfront costs, and not all buyers are willing or able to make that investment. There is also the question of accountability, ensuring that "green" claims are backed by genuine practices rather than marketing narratives.

But here too, the shift is visible. A more aware buyer, coupled with evolving standards and certifications, is slowly nudging the industry towards greater transparency.

What stands out in Chennai today is a subtle but significant change in mindset. Homebuyers are asking different questions. How much water does the building consume? Is there provision for waste segregation? How resilient is this home to the city's climate realities? These are no longer niche concerns, they are becoming central to decision-making.

Earth Day, then, is not just a moment of reflection; it is a reminder of the role each stakeholder plays in shaping the city's future. For developers, it is an opportunity to innovate responsibly. For policymakers, a call to strengthen frameworks that encourage sustainable practices. And for residents, a chance to recognise that every choice, however small, contributes to a larger impact.

In a city like Chennai, where the relationship between people and the environment is both fragile and deeply intertwined, the idea of Our Power, Our Planet feels especially relevant. It is a reminder that the future of real estate is not just about building more, but about building better.

Because ultimately, the homes we create today will define the city we live in tomorrow. And that, perhaps, is the greatest power we hold.

In October 2024, the Tamil Nadu government declared extreme heat as a State specific disaster, and was the first State in India to declare it. This led to policy initiatives such as the integration of UN Environment Programme's passive cooling guidelines into the Green School Programme. The next stage would be the formulation of guidelines and broader public awareness.

The need for cooling the urban environment and for design that keeps buildings cool, especially affordable housing, is the need of the hour. On another front, the Environment, Climate Change and Forests Department, along with the Department of Education and Tamil Nadu Green Climate Company, has initiated the cool roof and passive cooling campaign for over 700 schools, with an objective to improve thermal comfort in all 38 districts. A cool roof uses reflective materials to reduce heat absorption and help keep indoor temperatures lower. In contrast, a green roof comprises layers of vegetation that provide insulation, keeping buildings cooler in summer and warmer in winter.

As for green roofs, they have been initiated elsewhere in India and several parts of the world. Terraces covered with greenery, vegetation, herbs and plants have several benefits, including substantially reducing the heat in the top floors of apartment blocks and other building typologies.

Most green gardens on terraces begin with a selection of these systems can absorb almost 60% of rain and recharge groundwater as well. In certain projects with larger open spaces, almost all the rainwater can be contained to reduce the risk of urban flooding.

According to the official website of the Tamil Nadu Water Supply and Drainage Board, stored rainwater can help to recharge local aquifers, reduce urban flooding and, most importantly, ensure water availability in water-scarce zones.

In the absence of awareness campaigns and training programmes, resident associations are wary of adopting green roofs. For instance, citizens fear that green roofs can result in water leakage. Waterproofing of terraces is essential before initiating such projects. Timely maintenance is crucial, too. Ecological practitioner Divya Manimaran, who worked at Auroville, notes that heat stress can affect plant health, while termites from the soil may damage wooden elements in the house. Maintenance can be difficult, especially during travel periods. Properly designed water drainage is also essential to avoid related issues. "A green net can help shield plants from direct heat, while choosing appropriately sized pots with proper overflow outlets will ensure good drainage. Regular watering at fixed times or through a simple drip irrigation system will keep plants hydrated, and adding cocopeat will help retain soil moisture,” she says. “Nutrient support through NPK inputs or jeevamrut can aid healthy growth, while neem oil will work as a natural pest deter-

Most green terraces begin with choosing plants that are robust and can grow with the least maintenance. Herbs such as tulsi (holy basil) have been traditionally grown in Chennai for generations, as well as spinach (keerai), tomatoes, curry leaves. These plants can survive the hot-humid weather.

rent, alongside other organic solutions suited to specific plant types and local conditions.”

At the fourth Tamil Nadu Climate Summit held in February, organised by the Department of Environment, Climate Change and Forests (DoECCF) along with partner institutions, Dr. Sowmya Swaminathan, chairperson of the M.S. Swaminathan Research Foundation, spoke about the importance of biodiversity in efforts to conserve nature and restore ecological balance. In this context, green roofs emerge as a practical intervention – one that can help revive the biodiversity steadily being eroded by expanding urban concrete.

In rapidly growing cities such as Chennai, the loss of open space is evident. Safe areas for the elderly and children are fast depleting, too. In this context, a transformed terrace can act as a community space for the apartment, including a creche and other facilities.

The Chennai Metropolitan Development Authority (CMDA)

has initiated a series of nature-based projects, rejuvenating lakes, and conserving and recreating parks. The United Nations Global Watch report recognises Tamil Nadu and its pioneering progress in conserving nature. Environmentalists and citizen groups, awaiting the Third Master Plan (to guide growth over the next two decades, 2026 to 2046) and the Tamil Nadu Combined Development and Building Rules, hope the CMDA will mandate green rooftops, enabling housing projects, both public and private, to integrate these measures alongside renewable energy.

For the green roof initiative to thrive and transform the city, the most essential would be active civic participation. A sustained awareness campaign by environmental institutions in collaboration with media houses could set the foundation for a climate-responsive urban environment, with green terraces as the protagonist for quality of life.

products as well at our Bengaluru store,” says Kashyap. While the carpenters at Vys-trit hail from Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and West Bengal, the rattan is sourced from Moradabad and Assam, arriving in fixed-sized patches or rolls. The larger customised rattan canvases are created by artisans in Bengaluru.

“We stretch the wet rattan on a frame to make it pliable. Then, it is stretched fully and mounted on the final frame, with artisans working on both sides of it, to pass the threads through, keeping it taut, but not too tight,” says Kashyap. The designs range from mandalas to birds, scenery and sometimes even silhouettes of couples. “We do a lot of wardrobe shutters across India. The client sends the frame, and we mount the rattan and embellish it.”

While Bengaluru remains their largest market, orders for Veyari come in from Mumbai, Pune, Hyderabad and Kochi.

Housewarming gifts such as key holders, frames of Ganesha, magazine holders and name plates are their bestsellers. Smaller wall art is priced at around ₹2,500 with teak coffee tables ranging from ₹19,000 upwards and larger dining units costing close to ₹1 lakh. The repertoire spans made-to-order bar cabinets, dining sets, console tables and sofas as well. The embroidery on rattan especially shines in lamps and light fixtures, as the soft glow of a bulb or the way the rattan catches the rays of the sun, casts a colourful matrix on the walls beside it.

For the founder couple, what began as a simple art experiment at home has now created sustainable livelihoods for their team. And the humble rattan has become the canvas for a new artform.

The freelance writer is based in Chennai.

Rattan is all the rage in the home decor space. From partitions to wardrobe shutters and seating, it provides a subtle statement that is both organic and elegant. Sourced from over 600 species of palms native to tropical regions of Asia, Africa and Australasia, rattan's earliest use was in basket weaving. Its market in the country is poised to hit $991 million as per the Indian Rattan Furniture Market (2025-2031) Outlook by 6Wresearch, with urban households buying rattan for indoor and outdoor use. Thanks to its rapid growth cycle, replenishing every five to seven years, rattan proves sustainability and design integrity can happily coexist. But other than traditional weaving, has any atelier really embellished rattan or used it as a canvas to innovate?

Embroidering cane

While Pinterest boards introduced cross stitch designs on rattan embroidery hoops post-pandemic, in India embroidery on rattan furniture was pioneered with ‘Veyari’, a thread-on-cane art form, crafted by Bengaluru-based artist Saumya Kashyap. Trained as a computer engineer, Kashyap's creative journey moved from technology to photography and canvas, and she now displays her artwork at her store, Vys-trit, in Indiranagar, Bengaluru. Her journey started in 2024. Kashyap says, “Veyari needed structure – a way to protect the integrity of the material and the meaning behind the work.” She trained her team, which comprises a dozen female domestic workers from the neighbourhood, who were looking to supplement their income. Her husband and partner at Vys-trit, Prashant, says, “In 2022, we had four panels of rattan on our walls at home, which were not really speaking to us. Saumya tried ways to spruce them up by painting, and then she came up with Veyari.” The threads used are surplus cotton yarn sourced

Threading the future of rattan

Bengaluru artist Saumya Kashyap reimagines cane as embroidered art for modern homes from textile processors, and the embroidery is done with over 20,000 shaded threads, as well as customised hues, depending on the project.

Patience and process

To create this unique thread on cane art, first rattan is stretched on teak frames, which are then used to make larger pieces of furniture. Hunsur and Nilambur teak are sourced with VOC 3 (low volatile organic compounds emanating little odour). “Eighty to hundred-year-old felled trees are available during state forest department auctions. Teak has beautiful grains and essential oils, and we don't do any termite proofing. Instead, we use solar dryers for three to six months and test for moisture levels. During the summer, we run coolers to increase moisture, so that the joints are firm and the wood cures well,” says Prashant. Water-based varnish and polishes are used to seal and shine the wood. A mix of Japanese joinery and Indian wood-working techniques is used to create cabinets, sofas, chairs and tables. “We go through multiple iterations and 3D cardboard prototypes for each piece.
