In Class X with the daughter

Family circumstances had forced her to discontinue schooling. Now, after two decades, Bhuvaneswari Suresh is appearing for Class X exams along with her daughter who has multiple disabilities

LIFFY THOMAS

Twenty-three years after she left formal schooling, Bhuvaneswari Suresh is thumbing through her textbooks again to study and complete what she left unfinished. On April 22, the mother of two with disabilities, took up the English exam through National Institute of Open Schooling (NIOS).

As she goes through these exams, she has a rare company: her 15-year-old daughter with multiple disabilities, S.B. Atchaya Shri, is also appearing for the Class X exam through NIOS.

Hailing from Tiruchirappalli, Bhuvaneswari had to drop out of school after Class IX due to the financial situation at home.

"I wanted to study, but by 18 I was married off and the thought of completing my schooling only got

Empowering special children

Founded in 1970 by Founder Director P. Leelavathy (Late) and Founder Secretary S.K. Nagarajan (Late), Clarke School for Children with Special Needs caters to those with hearing impairment, intellectual disabilities, autism and deafblindness. Besides government certified vocational courses, the school offers training in table tennis, art, crafts and drawing. It is currently open for admissions to the new academic year.

postponed with responsibility at home," says the 35-year-old mother.

Two years after she was born, Atchaya Shri suffered brain fever that resulted in complete loss of hearing in her left ear and partial loss in the right. She was also diagnosed with cerebral palsy.

The family moved to Chennai for treatment and schooling for Atchaya and Bhuvaneswari's dream of studying had to take a backseat. In 2016, her second daughter was born and she was later diagnosed with cerebral palsy.

Bhuvaneswari's life revolved around taking care of her two daughters and ensuring they got the best therapy and schooling.

After a stint at a school in Taramani, Atchaya moved to Clarke School for Children with Special Needs in her Class VI.

This was no easy journey. The mother and daughter travel on a two-wheeler from their home in Pallavaram to the school in R.K. Salai.

"My younger one goes to a special school in Madipakkam, so my husband drops her in the morning. In the evening, I pick both of them," she says.

Bhuvaneswari never expected the teachers at Clarke's School were igniting a spark in her. "They started nudging me to clear my Class X along with my daughter as I was anyway helping her at home," says the mother grateful for the support she received from all teachers.

In July 2025, the school got her name registered for the NIOS examination and also started helping her with necessary materials.

Bhuvaneswari's big apprehension was about whether she can study after a gap of two decades and with her daughters requiring continuous care and attention.

"I studied in Tamil medium and am now appearing in English medium; that is part of the challenge," says Bhuvaneswari. She studies at night for an hour and early in the morning before her household chores begin.

She has also sat in her daughter's class to understand new topics. "During the break, teachers helps me clarify my doubts," she says.

Of the five papers, Bhuvaneswari has decided to take Tamil and Data Entry exams in October.

Bhuvaneswari is grateful to her husband, K. Suresh, and extended family members for the support extended to her. Atchaya, she says, has shown remarkable improvement with the attention given at the school.

Jayanthi Narayanan, principal, Clarke School, says this year they have five children with multiple disabilities and five with intellectual disabilities appearing for Class X through NIOS; and three students in Class XII.

"When parents are educated they can guide their children better. We encourage many of them to become special educators for which they must have completed schooling," says Jayanthi, who has been with the school for the last four decades. She is grateful for the support by honorary secretary S.N. Srikanth.

Summer Quiz Camp 2026 coming up in May

Open to students from Grades 5 to 11, the five-day camp focusses on building skills that go beyond textbooks

With the long summer break often leading to increased screen time, Chennai-based leading quizzing firm X Quiz It is offering students a productive alternative through its Summer Quiz Camp 2026, a five-day programme designed to keep young minds engaged and curious.

A press release notes that open to students from Grades 5 to 11, the camp focusses on building skills that go beyond textbooks. Participants will learn techniques in smart deduction, develop lateral thinking abilities, and stay updated with current affairs through interactive and high-energy sessions.

A highlight of the programme is a series of 'Ask Me Anything' (AMA) sessions with experienced quizmasters, giving students direct access to insights, strategies and real-world quizzing experience.

The camp is designed for both beginners and seasoned quizzers, making it accessible to any student with curiosity and enthusiasm for learning, the release adds.

All participants will receive certificates, while top performers will be offered opportunities for one-on-one mentoring and internships.

Scholarships for deserving students

Dream India E&C Trust is inviting applications from students across Tamil Nadu who have completed Class 10 and Class XII for educational scholarships under the project "Education for All".

Students from government or rural government schools who have completed 10th or 12th in the year 2026 and planning for higher studies will be given priority.

Students from private schools coming from single parent households or with guardians can also apply. Scholarship for higher studies would be in the range of ₹15,000 to ₹25,000. Those selected for scholarship would be guided by a mentor. Last year, the Dream India team processed scholarship for over 200 students across various locations in Tamil Nadu, Bangalore and Mumbai, said a press release.

The applications would be analysed by the trustees of Dream India and processed within a time frame of three to four weeks. For details, WhatsApp 99406 75570.

Big questions for young minds

Philosophising is usually, and often erroneously, associated with hoary hair, even lack of hair. Alwarpet resident Rhea Kuthoore seeks to break that stereotype by introducing children to philosophical inquiry through a systematic programme “Philosophising with children”: that is how Rhea Kuthoore headlines her LinkedIn page. That is a rare value proposition to come across in most places, not just on a LinkedIn profile.

LIFFY THOMAS

Rhea considers getting children to grapple with philosophical questions a natural thing to do, as she herself had been through that routine at home while growing up.

“My dad in particular would want us to put on our thinking caps. For instance, he would ask: ‘Do you know when your desire becomes greed?’,” she recalls.

The idea that children should be served a regular diet of tough questions got reinforced at school, thanks to Rhea’s teachers at Abacus Montessori School. A kindergarten teacher even maintained a diary of what her students would share.

Recently, when Rhea met this teacher, the latter recalled a conversation between Rhea and her classmate. Rhea had discussed with her peer that her mother was “going to office”. Surprised to learn that it was her mom going to office, the friend corrected Rhea that it should be “dad going to office.”

“So I used to think my mom is my dad. These anecdotes are interesting because as children we may not know how to make inferences, we start observing the norms of society and imagine it differently,” says Rhea, an Alwarpet resident.

Rhea pursued an undergraduate programme in Liberal Arts from Ashoka University and a masters in Childhood Studies from Rutgers University in the United States. This was followed by a two-year stint at Sholai School in Kodaikanal where she started exploring children’s literature.

“A lot of my learning also came from organisations outside the country including PLATO (Philosophy Learning and Teaching Organisation),” says Rhea, who is in her late 20s.

Rhea currently works with educators and teachers, offering classes online. For in-person knowledge sharing, Rhea has opened a dedicated space in Chennai for children and adults to explore.

More than 100 of her favourite philosophical picture books from around the world have been

Summer camp in May

- Room of Children’s Philosophises is conducting a summer philosophy camp in May for children, ideally suited for those between 11 and 14 years of age.
- Rhea Kuthoore and Jigar Bhalani would be the resourcepersons helping children discover their philosophical voice and self through the workshop.
- Participants will get to ask big questions, ethical and existential, that perplex them. They will have a chance to understand themselves and the world around them, all through stories and dialogue.
- The camp is happening at D3, Third floor, Ashok Swetha Apartments, Royapettah. For details, call 8816933078.

showcased at Room of Children’s Philosophises. The space at an apartment complex in Royapettah functions as a reading room. Workshops are also conducted in this space. She believes that philosophising begins with asking questions and our understanding of an issue deepens as the questions around it are refined. And she is hugely familiar with the J. Krishnamurthi style of inquiry, having been associated with a school inspired by his philosophy, for two years.

“This is a small space to listen to voices of children and their many questions that often goes unheard. You might love the stories in the books displayed, but I want them to understand the story as a philosophical puzzle and get them to think together about the question,” she says.

Polling day pulse

Here are visuals from across polling booths in Chennai Metropolitan Area, even those in far-flung Tiruvallur, that display the exercise of people's power with punctuations of human moments. In a relief from the standard image of a polling booth plonked inside the premises of an educational institution, here and there, residents queued inside gated communities to get their finger inked. These living spaces had been turned into voting centres. There was the heart-tugging image of a disabled woman seated in a modified tricycle, one crowned with a roof to keep the nosey sun out. Volunteers were stepping in to assist seniors. Green booths spared a thought for the planet. The message was loud and clear: impressive voter participation and an equally commendable effort to break down barriers

Rare crane shows up at Adyar Poonga; camera not in sight

During her morning walk at the green facility on April 21, Sagarika Gupta takes a video of a Slaty-legged crane with her mobile phone; one of the restrictions that go with the walker's pass is that the user should not carry a camera with them

PRINCE FREDERICK

The high-resolution image of a lifer is to a birder what a new degree certificate is to an over-qualified but still compulsive degree hoarder. For the elucidation of the chirp-challenged constituency, a lifer is a bird species a birder has clapped eyes on for the first time; and the rarer the feathers, the more treasured the photo of the bird that has been clicked. Birder Sagarika Gupta is disconsolate with the disappointment of a studious person who has completed a rare and brow-bending degree successfully, but is denied a certificate for some strange reason.

On April 21, during a morning walk at the Adyar Poonga, a Slaty-legged crane had crossed Sagarika's path, and if ever she bitterly regretted not having a camera with a telephoto lens at hand, this was the time.

Only the previous week, after multiple applications, Sagarika had secured a walker's pass, one that provided her access to the green facility for walking, and not photographing avian life or anything else. As she puts it, the walker's access comes with well-etched restrictions, and a camera is on the restricted list. She therefore had to make do with the marble phone, and with it, she clicked a video of the bird that was strutting around in a heavily shaded undergrowth.

It was around 6.50 a.m., and because of where the bird was found, in a thick, shaded undergrowth, on the side of the walkway closer to the waterway, lighting was not in her favour. As those known to her who have visited the Poonga had informed her that Orange-headed thrush sighting was possible out there, she was half expecting see one. Given its rarity in these parts, a Slaty-legged crane was the last feather she had expected to see on the walk. As this crane has a touch of orange to it, at the first, cursory look, she imagined that an Orange-headed thrust was moving about in the undergrowth.

A Slaty-legged crane photographed by Sathya Narayanan Sridhar at Sithalapakkam on December 23, 2023 and posted on iNaturalist.

Fortunately, binoculars are allowed along with the mobile phone, and upon peering through that instrument of magnification, she saw the bird for what it was. Though this was the first time she was seeing a Slaty-legged crane in the field, she had seen it in pixels before. Sagarika notes she delayed taking a video of the bird as she did not want to startle it with her sudden movements.

The Slaty-legged crane "treads softly" in and around Chennai, and reportedly, only two records of the species exist, and both on iNaturalist. Sagarika has entered her sighting on eBird with the video of the bird. This writer got in touch with Sathya Narayanan Sridhar, one of the two birders who have documented a Slaty-legged crane sighting with photograph on iNaturalist. Sathya Narayanan Sridhar had sighted the species at Sithalapakkam on December 23, 2023; and he has shared with The Hindu Downtown an image of the Slaty-legged crane he spotted that memorable day.

Young musicians shine at Thalir Kala Awards Season 3

The response to this event organised by Rotary Club of Chennai Carnatic District 3234 was impressive Rotary Club of Chennai Carnatic District 3234 hosted the third edition of the Thalir Kala Awards, a competition aimed at nurturing young musical talent at Vani Mahal in T. Nagar.

Bringing together students from schools across the city, the event showcased impressive performances by budding artistes, highlighting both skill and passion for classical music. Participants competed in two age groups – under 12 and 12 to 18 years – across Vocal and Instrumental categories, including string and wind instruments.

The initiative is designed to inspire the younger generation to engage with classical traditions. “Carnatic music is not just an art form – it is a living heritage that must be experienced, practised and passed on. Chennai has always been its heartbeat, especially during the Margazhi season. Through initiatives like Thalir Kala Awards, we are not only nurturing talent but shaping the custodians of this legacy for the future,” said Club President Rtn. Arun Mahadevan in a release.

The competition was judged by senior musicians Radha Bhaskar and Girija Guruswamy, who praised the high standard of performances.

Event Chairman Rtn. Chandramouli emphasised the importance of creating sustained opportunities for young artists. He noted that such platforms not only build confidence but also help preserve and promote the classical arts among the next generation.

Winners were awarded trophies and cash prizes, while all participants received appreciation for their efforts, added the release. Arun Mahadevan described the response to this year’s edition as overwhelming and announced that Season 4 will be even larger, with a hybrid format combining online and in-person rounds.

Wish lists of children with terminal illnesses fulfilled

Madras Cosmopolitan Ladies Circle 38 contributed to the Make a Wish Foundation to fulfil the wishes of eight underprivileged children dealing with terminal illnesses. Each of the children had a wish list of toys that they wanted. The wishes included doctor’s play sets, toy cars and carrom board. The donation took place at the Institute of Child Health and Hospital for Children, Egmore, where they are being treated, said a release.

Foundation course in art

Lil Studio, a beacon of creativity among young artists, is offering a foundation course that introduces children to the world of art. The course will be held from May 4 to 15, 10.30 a.m. to 12.30 p.m., at Utopia Play Centre.

The course will help the children develop their fundamentals in drawing, painting, and exploring diverse mediums.

Apart from that, the focus is on unlocking creativity in a fun, encouraging environment where every child can explore, create, and enjoy art.
