Direction board in Peerkanaranai adds to confusion

Motorists navigating this section, where GST Road facilitates connectivity to the underpass connecting Old GST Road, want the signboard placed before the underpass

T.S. ATUL SWAMINATHAN

The National Highways Authority of India (NHAI) has created a passageway, a road under a bridge, connecting GST Road and the Old GST Road, Peerkanaranai - New Perungalathur.

However, most motorists are unaware of this, and come to know of it only through a direction board placed near the exit lane of the underpass from Old GST Road to GST Road.

Motorists negotiating the Peerkanaranai section have requested NHAI and the traffic wing of the Tambaram Police Commissionerate to install boards before the underpass.

Someone accustomed to motoring on this section, P. Mohan Prabhakaran says, "Motorists from GST Road swerve suddenly to their left increasing the risk of accidents. A few vehicle users enter the wrong lane while trying to get to the underpass, increasing the risk of collision with motorists coming from Old GST Road."

Mohan points out that the directional board should be installed before the New Perungalathur overpass.

Corporation rolls back water charge hike after protest

On April 15, the Tambaram Corporation had increased water charge from ₹50.50 per month to a whopping ₹150.50; residents were on the warpath, and with a couple of major residents' associations putting their entire weight behind the campaign, by sundown, the hike was scaled back

The bill after the hike; and (right) after the rollback of the hike.

SETHU MADHAVAN

On April 15, 2026 residents of areas governed by Tambaram City Municipal Corporation woke up to discover that water now cost dear. From ₹50.50 per month, drinking water charge had been spiked to a whopping ₹150.50. Residents had to fork out three times the amount they had been accustomed to paying. From ₹606 per year, water charge now stood at a forbidding ₹1,806.

Residents were on the warpath, and with a couple of major residents' associations putting their entire weight behind the campaign, by sundown, the hike was scaled back, and the old water charge reinstated with effect from April 15.

What got residents' dander up was the arbitrary manner in which the hike was effected. No prior notice, let alone a consultation. Following the hike, a flurry of calls from residents went out to Tambaram Corporation Commissioner, but they reportedly went unanswered.

Fortunately, one of my friends, D. Devaraj (who is secretary of New Colony Residents Welfare Association), got through to the Commissioner, reaching him on the phone, and expressed to widespread disenchantment among residents with the massively bumped-up water charge. Meanwhile, residents were paying the increased amount from 10.00 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the day. The Chromepet area under the Tambaram Corporation accounts for around 70 wards, and in all the wards, they were collecting water charge on that day. From April 1 to 14, no collections were made as they had not closed accounts of March 31. The Commissioner listened to Devaraj and promised to have the hike scaled back. By then, C. Murugaiyan, secretary, Federation of Civic and Welfare Associations in Zones 2 and 3 of Tambaram City Municipal Corporation also got through to the Commissioner and took him through the issue, adding weight to residents' cause. As a result of these discussions with the Commissioner, the hike was rolled back.

By sundown on April 15, the rollback was effected and the old rate put up on Tambaram Corporation website. The residents who were forced to pay the enhanced amount on April 15, 2026 are anxious to know how the enhanced amount collected will be adjusted in future bills by Corporation authorities.

Let the authorities clarify this in detail to the residents concerned.

Gruelling wait at Chromepet stop

Commuters sit on shaky seats; they want the roof to be extended

T.S. ATUL SWAMINATHAN

Waiting at Chromepet halter (towards Hasthinapuram) on GST Road gets more tiring in this sweltering heat, as the overhead roof at the stop is not wide enough to provide shelter for commuters. To add to that, there are fewer seats for waiting commuters. So desperate are people to find a seat that a few can be seen sitting on the shaky seats or on construction materials. Some find cover under umbrellas.

Commuters take shelter by sitting on construction materials along a narrow path leading to platform 1A at Chromepet railway station. When the commuters spot their destination buses, they rush to board amidst the traffic.

P. V. Roopashree, a commuter, says, "It was some months ago that the shelter was provided, and it is already in this state. The seats are used to keep luggage. Further, seating facilities should be increased as well." The commuters also want a dedicated bus bay.

A thoroughfare

Motorists from Chromepet (West) must take a U-turn under the Palavaram grade separator to go to Chromepet (East). To avoid detours, motorists drive through the bus stop in addition to parking of vehicles and vehicular traffic moving towards Hasthinapuram and regions along the stretch.

Given the magnitude of the commuters' traffic, a bay keeper has to be deployed and ensure vehicular traffic does not enter the area.

Unplanned restoration work at Chitlapakkam lake

SUNIL JAYARAM

Work to revive the Chitlapakkam Lake began at the end of 2019. Well over six years later, the Water Resources Department is yet to start installing a sluice gate to connect the peripheral drain for rainwater storage.

At present, sandbags have been placed to prevent rainwater from flowing into nearby localities in East Tambaram or a downstream lake, but during heavy rains, the sandbags can get washed away, preventing rainwater storage.

The sluice gate can be operated based on the lake's water flow and capacity. It is important not to let the water escape.

At the sprawling Kathipara Urban Square in Alandur, the statue of Jawaharlal Nehru could do with a little more care. A few things need to be done. One, the statue's height needs to be increased so that it can be clearly seen from the Kathipara Grade Separator or a metro train.

Two, there is not much lighting around the statue. A laser lighting and a garden must be created around the statue. The statue was unveiled on December 21, 1987 by then Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Then Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu M.G. Ramachandran attended the event.

Incomplete SWD works hit regular life in Chromepet

With a section of Janakiraman Street dug up for this work, detours have become the norm; civic body cites labour shortage, election duty for delay

T. ARVIND

Incomplete storm water drain (SWD) works in Chromepet have caused inconvenience to residents and traders, with a key stretch left unfinished for over two weeks, disrupting daily movement.

Tambaram City Municipal Corporation has been taking up reconstruction of damaged stormwater drains as part of flood mitigation measures. However, in Ward 38 near the Hasthinapuram Government School, work on Janakiraman Road has been left half-way, with one portion completed using covered concrete channels while the remaining stretch lies dug up and unattended.

The affected stretch includes Janakiraman Street-Bharathi Street junction, an arterial point connecting Netaji Nagar Main Road, Shanmugam Street, VOC Street and areas up to Nemilichery. With the road blocked, pedestrians, including students, women workers and the elderly, are forced to take longer, roundabout routes.

"For what used to be a simple crossing, I now have to walk through two additional streets early in the morning," said Selvi, a domestic worker, adding that stray dog attacks in unfamiliar lanes have added to her concerns.

Livelihoods affected

Small traders and daily wage earners say the disruption has hit their routine. Mani, who runs a two-wheeler repair shop near Bharathi Street, said moving vehicles for testing or repairs has become difficult. "At least a temporary wooden or metal plank across the trench would help pedestrians," he said.

Vegetable vendors and construction workers commuting towards Hasthinapuram from nearby lake areas are among the worst affected. "At this age, pushing my cart an extra half-kilometre is exhausting," said 61-year-old Kamala, a vendor. Pushpalatha, a school teacher who runs a tuition centre, said students are often delayed due to the diversion.

Residents of an apartment complex at the junction have been allowing pedestrians to pass through their premises as a temporary relief, despite security concerns.

Local councillors have also alleged interference by rival political groups in the delay.

Responding to the issue, Shanmugha Saravanan, Assistant Engineer, Tambaram Corporation, said the work had slowed due to a sudden shortage of labourers and his deployment for election duty. "Many workers were unavailable during the election period. We will press the contractor to complete the work soon," he said.

With elections now over, residents have urged authorities to expedite the project and ensure that delays do not recur, stressing the need for timely completion of civic works.

Bhuvanewari Suresh and daughter Atchaya Shri.

LIFFY THOMAS

Twenty-three years after she left formal schooling, Bhuvanewari Suresh is thumbing through her textbooks again to study and complete what she left unfinished. On April 22, the mother of two with disabilities, took up the English exam through National Institute of Open Schooling (NIOS).

As she goes through these exams, she has a rare company: her 15-year-old daughter with multiple disabilities, S.B. Atchaya Shri, is also appearing for the Class X exam through NIOS.

Hailing from Tiruchirappalli, Bhuvanewari had to drop out of school after Class IX due to the financial situation at home.

"I wanted to study, but by 18 I was married off and the thought of completing my schooling only got postponed with responsibility at home," says the 35-year-old moth-

Founded in 1970 by Founder Director P. Leelavathy (Late) and Founder Secretary S.K. Nagarajan (Late), Clarke School for Children with Special Needs caters to those with hearing impairment, intellectual disabilities, autism and deafblindness. Besides government certified vocational courses, the school offers training in table tennis, art, crafts and drawing. It is currently open for admissions to the new academic year.

Atchaya and Bhuvanewari's dream of studying had to take a backseat. In 2016, her second daughter was born and she was later diagnosed with cerebral palsy.

Bhuvanewari's life revolved around taking care of her two daughters and ensuring they got the best therapy and schooling.

After a stint at a school in Taramani, Atchaya moved to Clarke School for Children with Special Needs in her Class VI.

This was no easy journey. The mother and daughter travel on a two-wheeler from their home in Pallavaram to the school in R.K. Salai.

"My younger one goes to a special school in Madipakkam, so my husband drops her in the morning. In the evening, I pick both of them," she says.

Bhuvanewari never expected the teachers at Clarke's School were igniting a spark in her. "They started nudging me to clear my Class X along with my daughter as I was anyway helping her at home," says the mother grateful for the support she received from all teachers.

In July 2025, the school got her name registered for the NIOS examination and also started helping her with necessary materials.

Bhuvanewari's big apprehension was about whether she can study after a gap of two decades and with her daughters requiring continuous care and attention.

"I studied in Tamil medium and am now appearing in English medium; that is part of the challenge," says Bhuvanewari. She studies at night for an hour and early in the morning before her household chores begin.

She has also sat in her daughter's class to understand new topics. "During the break, teachers helps me clarify my doubts," she says.

Of the five papers, Bhuvanewari has decided to take Tamil and Data Entry exams in October.

Bhuvanewari is grateful to her husband, K. Suresh, and extended family members for the support extended to her. Atchaya, she says, has shown remarkable improvement with the attention given at the school.

Jayanthi Narayanan, principal, Clarke School, says this year they have five children with multiple disabilities and five with intellectual disabilities appearing for Class X through NIOS; and three students in Class XII.

"When parents are educated they can guide their children better. We encourage many of them to become special educators for which they must have completed schooling," says Jayanthi, who has been with the school for the last four decades. She is grateful for the support by honorary secretary S.N. Srikanth.

Rare crane shows up at Adyar Poonga; camera not in sight

During her morning walk at the green facility on April 21, Sagarika Gupta takes a video of a Slaty-legged crane with her mobile phone; one of the restrictions that go with the walker's pass is that the user should not carry a camera with them

PRINCE FREDERICK

The high-resolution image of a lifer is to a birder what a new degree certificate is to an over-qualified but still compulsive degree hoarder. For the elucidation of the chirp-challenged constituency, a lifer is a bird species a birder has clapped eyes on for the first time; and the rarer the feathers, the more treasured the photo of the bird that has been clicked. Birder Sagarika Gupta is disconsolate with the disappointment of a studious person who has completed a rare and brow-bending degree successfully, but is denied a certificate for some strange reason.

On April 21, during a morning walk at the Adyar Poonga, a Slaty-legged crane had crossed Sagarika's path, and if ever she bitterly regretted not having a camera with a telephoto lens at hand, this was the time.

Only the previous week, after multiple applications, Sagarika had secured a walker's pass, one that provided her access to the green facility for walking, and not photographing avian life or anything else. As she puts it, the walker's access comes with well-etched restrictions, and a camera is on the restricted list. She therefore had to make do with the marble phone, and with it, she clicked a video of the bird that was strutting around in a heavily shaded undergrowth.

It was around 6.50 a.m., and because of where the bird was found, in a thick, shaded undergrowth, on the side of the walkway closer to the waterway, lighting was not in her favour. As those known to her who have visited the Poonga had informed her that Orange-headed thrush sighting was possible out there, she was half expecting see one. Given its rarity in these parts, a Slaty-legged crane was the last feather she had expected to see on the walk. As this crane has a touch of orange to it, at the first, cursory look, she imagined that an Orange-headed thrust was moving about in the undergrowth.

A Slaty-legged crane photographed by Sathya Narayanan Sridhar at Sithalapakkam on December 23, 2023 and posted on iNaturalist.

Fortunately, binoculars are allowed along with the mobile phone, and upon peering through that instrument of magnification, she saw the bird for what it was. Though this was the first time she was seeing a Slaty-legged crane in the field, she had seen it in pixels before. Sagarika notes she delayed taking a video of the bird as she did not want to startle it with her sudden movements.

The Slaty-legged crane "treads softly" in and around Chennai, and reportedly, only two records of the species exist, and both on iNaturalist. Sagarika has entered her sighting on eBird with the video of the bird. This writer got in touch with Sathya Narayanan Sridhar, one of the two birders who have documented a Slaty-legged crane sighting with photograph on iNaturalist. Sathya Narayanan Sridhar had sighted the species at Sithalapakkam on December 23, 2023; and he has shared with The Hindu Downtown an image of the Slaty-legged crane he spotted that memorable day.

Polling day pulse

Here are visuals from across polling booths in Chennai Metropolitan Area, even those in far-flung Tiruvallur, that display the exercise of people's power with punctuations of human moments. In a relief from the standard image of a polling booth plonked inside the premises of an educational institution, here and there, residents queued inside gated communities to get their finger inked. These living spaces had been turned into voting centres. There was the heart-tugging image of a disabled woman seated in a modified tricycle, one crowned with a roof to keep the nosey sun out. Volunteers were stepping in to assist seniors. Green booths spared a thought for the planet. The message was loud and clear: impressive voter participation and an equally commendable effort to break down barriers Residents queue up to cast their vote at Prince apartment on Ilaya Street in Dr. Radhakrishnan Nagar constituency. This was among the gated communities the Election Commission of India had turned into voting centres.

OMR gated communities glaringly absent

While a few gated communities elsewhere in Chennai served as voting centres, the IT corridor did not open its account

PRINCE FREDERICK

The election coverage across media had a sprinkle of reports from Chennai about gated communities serving as voting centres, and surprisingly, none of these communities had an OMR address. That is odd, as odd as having Abhishek Sharma batting through the entire length of the power play, facing a healthy number of balls, but not having one sixer to his name. If gated communities ever felt at home anywhere it would be OMR. They would find themselves among kith and kin, given the number of communities nestling on the arterial road. OMR is a natural when it comes to “scoring” gated communities, it keeps adding them to its score at a clip and effortlessly too.

Harsha Koda, co-founder of Federation of OMR Residents Association, notes that efforts were on to have polling booths at a decent number of gated communities on OMR, but the efforts, though made in earnest, did not fructify.

He elaborates that the Election Commission did reach out to around 15-20 communities along OMR.

Harsha points out that even before FOMRRA started the ACTIVOTE campaign to assist voters with their VoterID corrections last year, he had spoken to N. Gopalswami, the former Chief Election Commissioner of India, who is based in Chennai.

“During that conversation, I asked about the feasibility of setting up polling booths within gated communities. He responded positively, saying there was a strong possibility. He also offered to speak with the current Election Commissioner of Tamil Nadu and facilitate a connection. Following that, officials did reach out to us. The idea was to establish dedicated polling booths within communities so that residents would not have to step out, thereby potentially increasing voter turnout. We believed this could significantly improve participation,” Harsha explains.

Subsequently, in October-November last year, the Election Commission sent a formal communication towards this end, officials inspecting several communities with the objecting of selecting them for establishment of voting centres for the 2026 TN Assembly elections.

The exercise did not produce what was desired. One after another, the communities that were considered for establishing voting centres were rejected. There was a pattern to what went against the communities that had made it to the shortlist.

Harsha says the primary concern cited was the inability to adequately secure these locations. Logistical issues also threw a spanner in the works: clubhouses were located on the first or second floor, which was deemed unsuitable.

Among the major constraints was the requirement to secure the premises for an extended duration; two days prior to polling, the polling day itself, and at least a day after. This meant clubhouses would be unavailable for regular use for nearly five to six days, which created resistance within the communities, adds Harsha. FOMRRA decided not to pursue the idea further for the current election cycle; but is determined to make this work for the next election, which could the local bodies elections.

The FOMRRA co-founder observes that rather than engaging in the futile business of crying bitterly over spilt milk, the team chose to channel its energy into helping voters in other ways. He cites the intensified efforts around SIR, setting up “a helpline that operated daily for about 15 days, from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m., using a Google Meet link” to ensure residents completed their SIR forms.

Harsha believes that these efforts have contributed handsomely to the stats that came out on election day; voter turnout registering 80.4% in Sholinganallur constituency and 88% in Tirupur constituency.

Young musicians shine at Thalir Kala Awards Season 3

The response to this event organised by Rotary Club of Chennai Carnatic District 3234 was impressive Rotary Club of Chennai Carnatic District 3234 hosted the third edition of the Thalir Kala Awards, a competition aimed at nurturing young musical talent at Vani Mahal in T. Nagar.

Bringing together students from schools across the city, the event showcased impressive performances by budding artistes, highlighting both skill and passion for classical music. Participants competed in two age groups – under 12 and 12 to 18 years – across Vocal and Instrumental categories, including string and wind instruments.

The initiative is designed to inspire the younger generation to engage with classical traditions. “Carnatic music is not just an art form – it is a living heritage that must be experienced, practised and passed on. Chennai has always been its heartbeat, especially during the Margazhi season. Through initiatives like Thalir Kala Awards, we are not only nurturing talent but shaping the custodians of this legacy for the future,” said Club President Rtn. Arun Mahadevan in a release.

The competition was judged by senior musicians Radha Bhaskar and Girija Guruswamy, who praised the high standard of performances.

Event Chairman Rtn. Chandramouli emphasised the importance of creating sustained opportunities for young artists. He noted that such platforms not only build confidence but also help preserve and promote the classical arts among the next generation.

Winners were awarded trophies and cash prizes, while all participants received appreciation for their efforts, added the release. Arun Mahadevan described the response to this year's edition as overwhelming and announced that Season 4 will be even larger, with a hybrid format combining online and in-person rounds.
