Beyond the threshold

From handcrafted brass and timber to hidden hardware and biometric access, entrance doors are becoming expressions of identity and design

Rashmi Gopal Rao

the door and its handle to be visible, without conventional locks, keyholes or access-control devices interrupting the composition.

Colour scheme

While wood is a timeless and classic choice, a mixture of bold colours and materials is also in vogue. “Apart from wood like teak, oak and walnut, brass, metal, stone and marble are some options to explore depending on the climate and size of the home,” says Devang Patel, principal designer and co-founder of P&D Associates, an architecture and interior design solutions firm in Chennai.

“Textures like fluted patterns on wood, rust-finished brass, metal inserts, and statement hardware, especially door handles, are in vogue,” he comments.

Timber, however, continues to dominate, although it is now being interpreted in more contemporary ways through veneer marquetry, engineered wood constructions, fluted surfaces and layered compositions.

“Natural grain patterns and variations are being celebrated rather than concealed. Deep walnut tones, smoked timber finishes, charcoal blacks, earthy browns, muted greens and oxidised metallic finishes are becoming increasingly common,” says Chandhana Ramesh, founder & principal architect, Empatio Architecture, a design studio in Chennai.

Security is now seamlessly integrated into design instead of being added later. In today’s era of hyper-personalisation, homeowners are increasingly incorporating smart locks, biometric access, facial recognition, digital keypads, remote access through mobile apps, integrated video doorbells and discreet surveillance systems for privacy and security.

Here is a look at a few showstopper doors:

The Bengaluru-based freelance writer is passionate about all things design, travel, food, art and culture.

Manipunj Residence, R+R Architects; Ahmedabad

The entrance to Manipunj Residence is conceived as a quiet architectural gesture rather than an object that demands attention. “A large pivot door is clad in the same light-toned travertine used across the facade, allowing it to merge seamlessly into the stone surface when closed. Its restrained palette, clean geometry and minimal detailing create a monolithic appearance,” says Ramesh Lohar, principal interior designer, founder and partner of R+R Architects, an architecture firm in Ahmedabad.

The Art House Project, P & D Associates; Chennai

The 10-foot entrance door to this home in Bharuch has been crafted in wood sourced from vendors who retail wood that is 50-100 years old. “This 10-foot double door in solid teak sports a rich walnut brown polish with clear semi-glass polyurethane (PU) coating. It complements the overall architectural language of the home and the decorative wrought iron inserts finished in matte black are a special feature of the door,” says Patel. The door has small openable windows with metal grills installed in the main body; these windows can be used to see who is outside the door without having to open the full door. It is an additional layer of security which is accentuated with traditional styling.

The House of Collected Time, Disha Subramaniam; Delhi

The 9-feet main entrance door crafted in solid wood and HDHMR (High-Density High-Moisture Resistance) has been finished using high-gloss PU paint. “Rather than relying on decorative excess, the emphasis is on refined detailing, quality craftsmanship and a seamless relationship with the surrounding architecture,” says Disha Subramaniam, principal designer and founder, Disha Subramaniam.

Nayam, Empatio Architecture; Chennai

Standing tall at 10 feet, the primary surface of this door is executed in custom veneer marquetry, where individually composed veneer pieces create a subtle geometric tapestry that adds depth. Rather than relying on colour contrast, the design celebrates the natural tonal variations within the timber itself, resulting in a warm palette of rich walnut and honey-brown hues.

Villa Serena, Studio Nola; Goa

Inspired by the streets of Portugal, the entrance door to this Goan villa which is just under 7 feet has a bold sage green hue which is in contrast to the overall blush pink colour scheme of the villa. “We kept most of the door solid and integrated glass in a pretty arch so you catch a glimpse of the outside while maintaining privacy and security. The one indulgence is an elaborate nature-inspired knocker, which becomes the single ornamental element on an otherwise quiet surface. The special feature is the elaborate monochromatic pathway which creates the perfect setting to lead you to the door,” says Sharon D’mello, founder of Studio Nola, an architecture and interior design firm in Goa.

Avelora House, HBS Studio, Amritsar

The entrance to the Avelora House is through a massive 13-foot door which is framed in rich natural wood. A perfect case of thoughtful design where functionality is elevated through craftsmanship, this oversized door combines clean vertical grooves with a finely crafted lattice panel that creates a subtle interplay of texture and depth. The warm timber finish is balanced by sleek black stone cladding and a contemporary digital lock. “Instead of decorative carving, we introduced a finely detailed lattice panel and linear grooves that create texture through light and shadow. The rich wood sits against the dark stone cladding, allowing both materials to enhance one another without competing for attention,” says Harkaran Singh Boparai, founder and principal architect of Harkaran Boparai Studio, a luxury architecture practice in Delhi and Dubai.

The Averin, AB Design; Kolkata

The 8-foot entrance door to this residence is finished in a warm taupe tone with concentric carved detailing that creates a strong sense of movement and depth. At its centre, an oval stone inlay becomes a subtle focal point, while the minimal black pull handle keeps the composition clean and contemporary. “The defining feature is the sculpted concentric pattern, which transforms the door into an architectural element rather than a flat surface. The natural stone insert introduces texture and contrast, while the concealed detailing and streamlined hardware ensure that the design remains elegant,” says Aanchal Bhuiwala, principal designer, AB Design.

Minister B. Rajkumar inaugurates The Hindu Real Estate and Urban Infrastructure Summit 2026, in Chennai. R. RAVINDRAN

this journey. I invite every stakeholder present here to work closely with the government in creating sustainable, affordable, innovative, and future-ready urban ecosystems. Tamil Nadu offers policy stability, skilled manpower, excellent infrastructure, industrial strength, and a transparent governance framework.
(Edited excerpt from the keynote address by Minister for Housing and Urban Development B. Rajkumar, who inaugurated The Hindu Real Estate & Urban Infrastructure Summit 2026 in Chennai, July 30.)

Building cities for tomorrow

Housing Minister B. Rajkumar outlines Tamil Nadu’s vision for sustainable, inclusive and investment-driven urban growth

Tamil Nadu has always been one of India’s most urbanised and industrialised States. Today, more than half of our population lives in urban areas. Every year, lakhs of people migrate to our towns and cities seeking better opportunities, education, healthcare, and employment. Urbanisation is not merely about constructing buildings. It is about creating cities that are inclusive, sustainable, resilient, and economically vibrant. Today, Tamil Nadu is witnessing an unprecedented investment in manufacturing, Global Capability Centres, logistics, electronics, automobiles, renewable energy, and emerging technologies. Every new investment creates demand for quality housing, commercial spaces, industrial parks, transport infrastructure, and modern urban services. This presents both a challenge and an opportunity. The challenge is to ensure that growth is well planned. The opportunity is to create cities that remain liveable not only for today’s generation but also for future generations. We are working towards faster planning approvals, improved infrastructure, integrated mobility, better stormwater management, enhanced water security, scientific waste management, affordable housing, and sustainable urban development. Green buildings, energy-efficient construction, water conservation, climate-resilient infrastructure, and smart urban planning will be integral to Tamil Nadu’s future growth. The government alone cannot build world-class cities. The private sector, architects, engineers, financial institutions, technology providers, and citizens are equal partners in

₹1,69,800

Mukhda I, II & III

This set of three panels celebrates anonymous faces sans features, almost inspired by the Stonehenge sculptures or African masks. Carved wooden faces, each unique and subtly distinct, coalesce into a whole. The pieces make a statement celebrating the individual within a collective.

Maya
An intricately carved allusion to a goddess, in wood, the panel can be bought in sets of three or four, to make a statement on a wall. Available in size 34"x 18.5"

₹49,800

Vayra

This tribal totem-inspired panel borrows from Indian and Native American leitmotifs. The panel is carved with details that are resplendent when they catch the light. As the background recedes, the animal and armour elements catch your eye with their exquisite detail.

₹1,32,500

Atvi I & II

Sculptural doors that celebrate Gothic cathedral architecture in soft shades of ivory and mahogany. Carved wooden arches rise in succession, drawing the eye upward. Panels can be mounted on walls or placed in foyers over tables. Available in different sizes.

₹15,240 upwards

Jaali Jaal

This piece is a paean to the ephemeral nature of light. Based on the idea of thresholds within Indian homes, it playfully conceals and reveals in equal measure. The large panel is heavy and best used with support so that it can cast shadows on the walls.

The art of wood

From Gothic arches to temple-inspired carvings, 'Sabha' reimagines handcrafted wooden doors and panels as contemporary decor

Anisha Menezes

Wood has long been a favourite decor choice for artefacts, partitions, and now even as a panelling material. But there is a quiet shift in using wooden doors as centrepieces in urban homes.

From gothic motifs to facial amalgamations, we look at the latest collection, 'Sabha', created by Kosh, a Bengaluru-based design studio, known for its exploration of handmade craft, materiality and storytelling. Drawing on the concept of a sabha as a space, sculptural wooden doors and décor pieces reflect on memory and belonging, using tactility to create an impression.

Founded in 2007 by Nidhi and Ketan Gupta, curating 'Sabha' has been a creative process. "We began to think about how a home gathers things, how it holds them quietly, until they begin to define the space on their own," says Nidhi.

Ketan, co-founder of the studio, explains the choice of wood for this collection. "All our wooden pieces are joinery-based, using mango wood, Ghana teak, teak from Madhya Pradesh and Mysuru as well." He says they are easier to carve and have exquisite grain that shines in the 'Sabha' collection.

"Sabha was not developed at one shot," adds Nidhi. "We added to the collection year on year from 2023. Each piece is painstakingly handcrafted and can be made to order (taking two to three months), while we do have a few stock pieces. We offer clients 3D renders to show them what the objects would look like in their interiors as well." Here is a look at some of the pieces in the collection.

The freelance writer is based in Chennai.

Meena

This piece, like Maya, is finely detailed and offers temple imagery on a single panel that can be used in a pooja room or even on the wall of a foyer or living room. The wooden carving juxtaposed with burnished metal framing offers a mixed-medium, tactile objet d'art.

₹59,400

Simha

Featuring the auspicious imagery of the simha (lion), it evokes the guardian figures found in South Indian temple sculptures. Available individually or as a set.

Ageing changes housing

Kerala’s demographic transition is redefining residential planning through inclusive design, wellness and community-focused developments

G. Rajagopal

For decades, residential real estate in Kerala evolved around the joint family. Homes were designed for multiple generations living under one roof, with elderly parents cared for within the household. Today, that model is changing. Smaller families, migration and longer life expectancy are reshaping housing demand in Kerala.

Kerala is already India’s oldest State demographically. According to the Government of India’s Population Projections for India and States 2011-2036, the share of people aged 60 years and above is expected to reach 22.8% by 2036, meaning one in four residents will be a senior citizen. The State’s elderly population is projected to nearly double from 4.2 million in 2011 to around 8.4 million by 2036, creating one of the country’s largest concentrations of older adults.

Dedicated budget

Unlike most States that are only beginning to acknowledge this transition, Kerala has started incorporating ageing into public policy and urban planning. In 2026, it became the first Indian State to present a dedicated Elderly Budget, bringing together investments in healthcare, social security, age-friendly infrastructure and community-based services. The State has also strengthened initiatives such as Vayomithram, Vayoraksha and Sayamprabha Homes, while Kochi became the first Indian city to join the World Health Organization’s Global Network for Age-friendly Cities and Communities. These initiatives signal an important shift: ageing is no longer viewed solely as a social welfare issue but as a planning and infrastructure priority.

This shift is beginning to influence Kerala’s residential real estate. Housing is gradually moving beyond conventional apartments and villas towards communities that support independent ageing. Developers are increasingly recognising seniors as a distinct homebuyer segment, creating demand for residences that combine accessibility, safety, convenience and opportunities for social engagement. Professionally managed senior living communities, once considered a niche offering, are steadily emerging as a specialised residential category.

Other amenities

Equally important is the evolution of residential design. Homes built for an ageing population require more than cosmetic changes. Wider doorways, step-free entrances, anti-skid flooring, accessible bathrooms, elevators, emergency response systems, better lighting and barrier-free common areas are becoming increasingly relevant. At the community level, walkable layouts, shaded pathways, activity centres, wellness facilities, neighbourhood retail and easy access to healthcare are likely to become defining features of future developments. Technology is also playing a growing role through smart home automation, digital access systems, emergency alerts and remote health connectivity, allowing seniors to live independently for longer.

Developers are increasingly recognising seniors as a distinct homebuyer segment, creating demand for residences that combine accessibility, safety, convenience and opportunities for social engagement

According to the India Ageing Report 2023, India’s population aged 60 years and above will increase from 149 million in 2022 to 347 million by 2050, accounting for nearly 20% of the country’s population. By 2046, older persons are projected to outnumber children below the age of 15 years. These demographic shifts will fundamentally reshape residential demand, requiring developers to think beyond conventional housing formats.

The future

The opportunity extends well beyond retirement communities. Future residential projects are likely to incorporate universal design principles as part of mainstream housing, recognising that accessibility benefits not only seniors but families across all age groups. Mixed-age communities, homes that support ageing in place and integrated townships with healthcare, wellness and hospitality services are expected to become increasingly common. As India’s population aged 80 years and above is projected to grow by nearly 279% between 2022 and 2050, demand for assisted living, rehabilitation, memory care and continuum-of-care communities will also expand.

Growth ahead

For the real estate sector, this represents the emergence of a new residential asset class rather than a niche product. Developers will increasingly be expected to deliver not just homes, but environments that support changing lifestyles, longer life expectancy and evolving care needs. In that sense, Kerala is demonstrating how demographic change can reshape residential planning, product design and community development.

Kerala’s ageing population is therefore more than a demographic milestone – it is an early indicator of how India’s residential real estate market will evolve. As more States move towards similar demographic profiles, the question is no longer whether housing will change, but how quickly the industry can adapt.

India’s residential skyline is entering a new phase. Towers rising beyond 250 metres are no longer outliers, and projects crossing the 300-metre mark are setting new benchmarks for residential engineering.

Mumbai is at the centre of this transformation. Home to most of India’s tallest residential buildings, the city is proving that vertical growth is no longer driven by architectural ambition alone, it is becoming an urban necessity shaped by redevelopment, land scarcity and engineering innovation.

As super-tall towers become part of Mumbai’s evolving skyline, the conversation is shifting from how tall a building can rise to how well it is designed, built and performs over its lifetime.

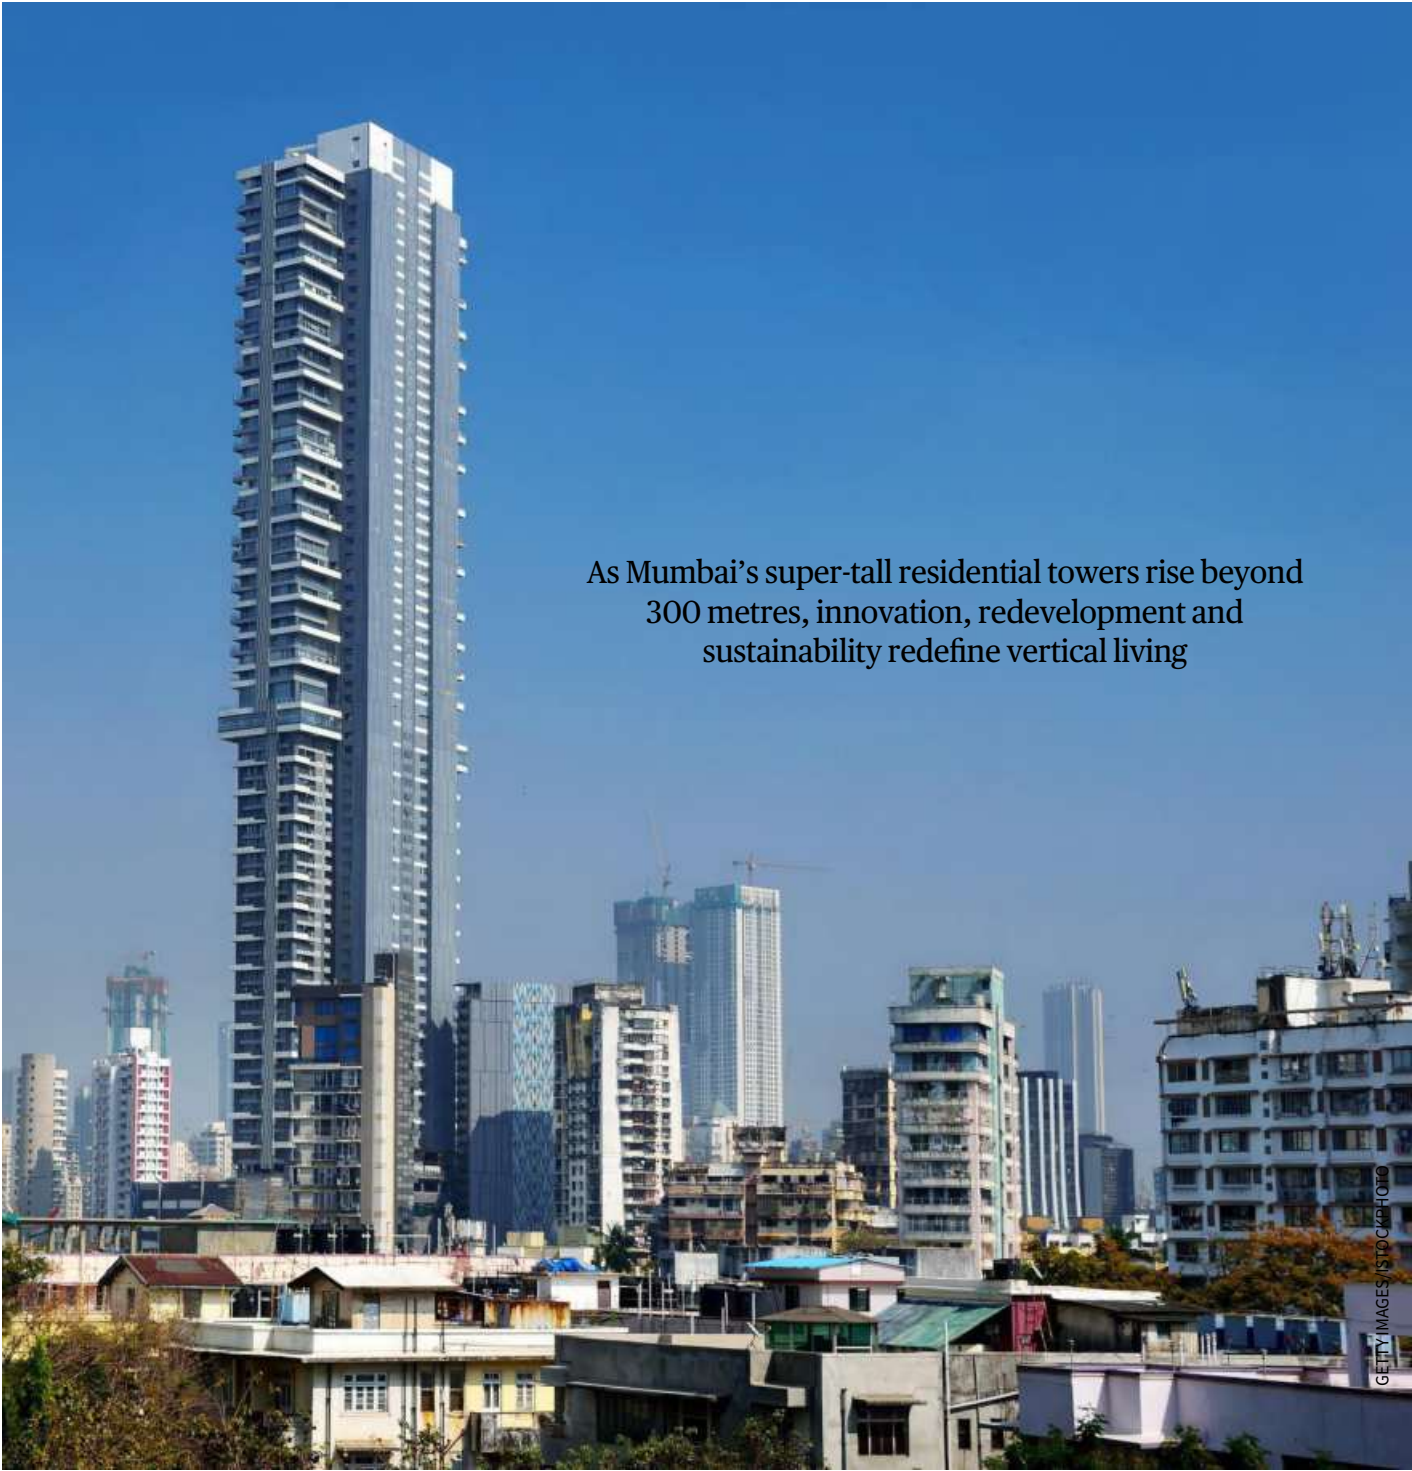

The backstory

Building a 300-metre residential tower is fundamentally different from constructing a conventional high-rise. Beyond a certain height, every engineering decision, from the foundation and structural system to vertical mobility and life safety, becomes significantly more complex.

Wind, for instance, often becomes a greater design challenge than gravity. Even the slightest building displacement has the potential to influence the comfort of its inhabitants; that is why it becomes necessary to conduct stringent wind tunnel tests during the design phase. The analysis of the effects of wind on the building enables designers to optimise its shape for better stability and to minimise displacements.

Performance-based design is gradually becoming the substitute for rule-based structural design. Modern modelling techniques enable the analysis of the buildings’ behaviour under the influence of wind forces, earthquakes and structural displacements.

New structural systems have

As Mumbai’s super-tall residential towers rise beyond 300 metres, innovation, redevelopment and sustainability redefine vertical living been developed as well. Composite steel-concrete structures, outrigger systems and high-strength concrete allow constructing higher and narrower buildings while preserving the stability and comfort of their inhabitants.

In Mumbai, the challenge begins beneath the surface. Unlike greenfield developments, many of the financial capital’s next-generation residential towers are emerging through redevelopment in dense urban neighbourhoods.

Every site presents unique geological and logistical constraints, from varying soil conditions and deep foundations to adjoining occupied buildings, underground utilities and limited construction access.

Engineering requires meticulous planning of excavation, construction sequencing, material movement and site logistics, all while ensuring minimal disruption to surrounding communities.

Housing some of India’s tallest residential towers, rising to more than 300 metres, South Mumbai’s evolving skyline illustrates how redevelopment is increasingly bringing together engineering precision, sustainable design, and thoughtful urban planning to shape the next generation of super-tall residential communities.

Digital changes

The complexity of super-tall construction has accelerated the adoption of digital technologies across the project lifecycle.

Systems such as BIM (Building Information Modelling) provide an opportunity for architects, structural engineers, MEP (mechanical, electrical and plumbing) consultants and builders to work together within a single model that helps address any design conflicts before actual construction starts.

Digital twin technology, intelligent project monitoring using AI, drone usage and quality control through sensors are other examples of technology integration by luxury real estate developers which enables better accuracy of construction execution.

These solutions give access to information about construction progress in real time, allowing engineering teams to spot possible problems right away.

New technologies have been adopted in construction along with digital solutions. Self-climbing formwork, prefabricated building components and high-strength concrete have significantly improved productivity, construction quality and safety, making the execution of super-tall towers

New structural systems have been developed as well. Composite steel-concrete structures, outrigger systems and high-strength concretes allow constructing higher and narrower buildings while preserving the stability and comfort of their inhabitants.

Designing for performance

One of the defining characteristics of next-generation residential towers is that every system must perform seamlessly over decades.

Vertical transportation is a good example. High-speed lifts, destination-controlled elevator systems and intelligent zoning are designed to move hundreds of residents efficiently while optimising valuable floor space.

Fire engineering has also become increasingly sophisticated. Refuge floors, pressurised staircases, smoke management systems, bus bar electrical panels, and integrated building management technologies work together to strengthen emergency preparedness.

Equally important is lifecycle performance. Sustainability is no longer treated as an add-on but as a core engineering objective. High-performance façades, energy-efficient building systems, water recycling and material optimisation help reduce operational costs while improving long-term environmental performance.

Building the skyline

India’s next generation of super-tall residential towers will not be defined by height alone. Their success would depend on excellence in engineering and execution.

As redevelopment continues to change the face of Mumbai, builders are supposed to face difficult engineering problems while designing effective, sustainable, and forward-looking homes.

In the next stage of shaping India’s skyline, projects that not only innovate structurally but also execute them in a disciplined manner will be the ones to taste success. The future of super-tall buildings will not be judged merely by their height but by their performance and sustainability.
