Residents of LGGS Colony point out that the irregular water supply hit the nadir over the last month, and the improvement in the last few days have been too negligible to inspire confidence. They want CMWSSB to shore up and expedite whatever remedial work they might have initiated now

On this section of Ashok Nagar, Metro water 'trickles in'

K. SRIDHARAN

For the past two months, residents of 20th Street at LGGS Colony in Ashok Nagar and surrounding streets have been receiving Metro Water supply irregularly.

Over the last month, the situation worsened considerably, with several streets in the locality receiving no Metro water supply whatsoever. In the last few days, there has been a slight improvement, but the supply is still noticeably below par. From the flow in the taps, one can sense low pressure in the pipelines. On July 31 and August 1, one noticed some activity on the ground, workers employed by CMWSSB digging a trench, as indicated by the photo. As this issue has dragged on for a considerable period of time, we are still registering our grievance, seeking that CMWSSB shore up and expedite whatever remedial work it might have started in the neighbourhood.

Drinking water is a basic necessity, yet residents in this locality have been left without a reliable source for weeks together.

Complaints have been lodged with Metro Water authorities on more than one occasion. Officials have visited the area to assess the situation, but this has not translated into any lasting solution, and regular supply has still not been restored. Soon, residents will be forced to depend on costly private water tankers to meet even their basic daily needs: an unfair financial burden on households, coming on top of the water tax already paid to CMWSSB. The elderly and families with young children are the worst-affected.

The government authorities concerned should look into this matter on priority and arrange for adequate drinking water supply through the proper channels without further delay. Continued neglect of an issue as essential as drinking water is causing genuine and avoidable hardship to the entire community.

'Grey water overflow: a recurrent issue'

The image, taken on July 30, 2026, shows grey water overflowing from a manhole of a stormwater drain at VGN Nagar First Main Road, near the junction of Oil Mill Road, in Iyyappanthangal Village Panchayat. This is a recurrent issue here, say residents.

They pointed out that illegal discharge of grey water from a multi-storey apartment into the SWD is the cause for the overflow.

"In addition to independent houses and small apartments, multi-storey residential buildings which have the mandatory treatment plants within their premises also let out grey water into stormwater drains through illegal pipe connections. Two other multi-storey residential buildings one located on Oil Mill Road and the other on Mettu Road are also known for illegal discharge of grey water into stormwater drains," says P. Senthil Kumar, a resident of Iyyappanthangal.

He has been pursuing this issue with the Tamil Nadu Pollution Control Board - Sriperumbudhur Environment District for the past two

While a Block Development Office is in charge of monitoring grey water disposal from independent houses and small apartments, the big multi-storey residential buildings which have the mandatory treatment plants come under the purview of Tamil Nadu Pollution Control Board.

The grey water overflow at the junction of VGN Nagar First Main Road and Oil Mill Road in Iyyappanthangal on July 30, 2026; a video grab of an illegal pipe from a gated community on Oil Mill Road which got exposed during a desilting work on November 1, 2025; the other end of the same illegal pipe that got exposed during water pipe-laying work on March 25, 2026; and the illegal pipe from another gated community on Mettu Road on August 1, 2025.

An official of Tamil Nadu Pollution Control Board - Sriperumbudhur Environment District, says "The three apartments are Prince Highlands and Tulive Dakshin on Oil Mill Road and Prestige Bellavista on Mettu Road. The department did not find any violation from these three multi-storey apartments. Mostly, individual houses or small apartments could be the cause for the overflow and if that is the case it is the responsibility of Kundrathur - Block Development Office. Because only buildings that measure 20,000 sqm and above come under the purview of TNPCB."

However, residents go by what they see on the ground.

"All could see the illegal pipe connections, especially when workers desilt the stormwater drains as part of monsoon preparedness exercise they illegal connections get exposed. Next, the difference in the colour of the water in the SWD near these apartments and bad odour are other evidences to prove my point. If TNPCB does not address this issue, I will escalate it to the National Green Tribunal," adds Senthil.

Reconstruct the broken walls

A broken wall has created an unauthorised passage for commuters near Guindy station

T.S. ATUL SWAMINATHAN

Residents of Bharathi Nagar and Race View Colony in Guindy have requested that Southern Railway reconstruct the broken walls along the railway lines in Old Narasingapuram, Race View Colony.

This will prevent commuters and pedestrians from trespassing on to the railway tracks.

S. Raghavan, a senior citizen and a long-time resident of Bharathi Nagar, says, "Recently, Southern Railway carried out a weeding exercise along the Colony, clearing bushes and the trees blocking the signal view. However, a few fell against the walls and eventually collapsed."

Since then, this has become a passage for commuters to board trains from the Guindy terminal and for pedestrians to reach Anna Salai.

"Recently, a young man from Bihar tried to cross the tracks, but was hit by a suburban train," said D. Manoharan, a resident of Race View Colony First Street.

The area is uneven, pitted and littered with garbage. The walls should be reconstructed to prevent further fatalities.

Humour Club International - Triplicane chapter made its 43rd anniversary special carrying forward a practice they started in 2016. For the 10th continuous year, the Club honoured four war widows, acknowledging their personal loss and supporting them with a financial assistance of ₹ one lakh each. In 2016, during an official visit to Srinagar, R. Sekharan, secretary of the Club, met some families who had lost their children protecting the borders. Their stories left a deep scar on him. Later, with the approval of the committee members of the Triplicane chapter they started to support families of war heroes financially. Instead of just crediting the amount to their accounts, the Club goes all out to reflect

10 years of service to kin of war heroes

Four war widows were honoured with financial assistance at the 43rd anniversary celebration of Humour Club International - Triplicane chapter and honour the sacrifice war widows endure with a fitting tribute that was held this time at Kamaraj Arangam in Teynampet.

From one war widow in 2016, this time they had four of them who were honoured. In the last 10 years, close to 30 beneficiaries were identified.

Munvar Sultan, a retired banker and a member of the Club for over two decades, says they seek the help of Anandham Youth Foundation and the Pensioners Association who forwards some of the most deserving applications for them to scrutinise.

"Every year, we select two war widows and a good amount of the financial assistance that we offer comes from the collection that we make during our monthly meetings. This time, two of our donors came on their own to support with the entire amount so we had four beneficiary in total," says Sultan.

The families chosen are from Tamil Nadu and the Club sponsors their travel, stay and other expenses as a gesture of the sacrifice the 'hero' has made.

Started in 1983 with less than 15 members, the Triplicane chapter remains the most lively among humour clubs in the city. Their anniversary celebrations go to packed houses and is held at St Bede's School auditorium and the monthly meetings draw more than 600 members.

Besides humour, the members have made this monthly outing meaningful adding a host of other social initiatives. They help Corporation workers and transgenders.

"We give free grocery worth ₹ 2000 to the poor families and so far we have supported 185 families," says Sekharan.

Milestone years of couples who are their members is another event they look forward to.

On August 9, the Club celebrates its 44th year at Mylapore Fine Arts Club at 4 p.m.

Gen Zers 'reel'

in visibility for modest clothing store

Organic social media content posted on Instagram by customers impressed with its range of trendy tops for women is ensuring an enviable customer base for Rani Collection in Pondy Bazaar, one extending beyond the Indian shores buyers' Instagram accounts.

Rani Collection run by Sikkander Sultan is nourished by healthy organic social media content, posted by customers on their Instagram pages impressed with its range of trendy tops for women and girls. Rani Collection operates from a small space within another store and for the convenience of its customers, a small part of it often spills on to a space under a tree without being underfoot. The sanctity of the pedestrian space is maintained.

ting in, in good numbers, Rani Collection could not have kept Insta visibility off its racks even if it tried to. It draws shoppers from far beyond Chennai, much of that, says Sikkander, is thanks to Instagram. The reach however is not confined to the state. After spotting the store on Instagram, a customer travelling from Kolkata stopped by during their visit to Chennai. Others have walked in from Malaysia and Sri Lanka after watching viral reels, while some families in the United Kingdom and the United States often shop through relatives visiting Chennai. Depending on the size of the order, the store also ships internationally. Rani Collection offers trendy tops starting at ₹300, while complete sets are priced between ₹500 and ₹3000. Even a purchase as small as ₹300 can be exchanged, and the customer can be certain he would not be met with an irritated frown. As Sikkander puts it, "We want our customers to confidently wear what they buy. If a garment is pushed to the back of a closet, it does injustice to the tailor who carefully stitched it. Every single thread reflects their hard work. I have seen their daily struggles, and I want their work to be valued." Beyond the bustling shop floor is a business man whose outlook is as contemporary as the collection he curates. He believes businesses must evolve with changing times, embracing new ideas and remaining relevant to a young demographic. Sikkander notes honesty and hard work are non-negotiables: open from 10:30 a.m to 10:30 p.m, seven days a week, "break" and "rest" sound like gibberish in Sikkander's ears. Without normalising workaholicism, one has to acknowledge this commitment just as one would this pavement store's rack strength and its owner's affordability. And Gen Zers are doing that with likes, reposts and reels on Instagram.

Gen Zers largely home in on this shop, and Sikkander himself is no spring chicken, being at least one generation removed. His family soaked in the garment business, Sikkander slid into the trade as effortlessly as one would through an open door, without any existential cogitations about purpose and calling. He established the shop at Pondy Bazaar in 2013, a good six years before pedestrianisation transformed the street into a congregating point, particularly for Gen Z. A singing circle spanning the city

Fuelled by Tamil music nostalgia, a community of amateur singers meet regularly across Chennai for singalongs. They are bound together by an organisation called Paadarivom Padipparivom which funnels its initiatives through an app

SHARON JESSICA MICHAEL

Paadarivom Padipparivom traces its origins to the lockdowns of 2020. Former IT professional Naggeshwerran S., aged 43, known as NGR in the music community, noticed a pattern while scrolling through the Smule karaoke app.

"People were singing because they enjoyed it, but many of them were also being mocked online. We realised there were many people who wanted to sing but did not know where to learn," says Naggeshwerran.

A decision to do something about this led to free live sessions on Facebook and YouTube, where participants got to learn one Tamil song every week. The lessons were as simple as they can be: songs were broken down into simple sounds and rhythmic patterns. "I have been singing since 1992, but I never learnt Carnatic music. Friends would teach me using sounds instead of swaras. We thought if this method worked for me, it could work for others too," he says. The first session, held on May 4, 2020, drew close to 500 viewers, far exceeding the organisers' expectations. Requests for regular classes soon followed, leading to the formation of Paadarivom Padipparivom.

The community now operates from two studios –Madipakkam and Saligramam which serve as its primary spaces for learning and singing. Each studio can accommodate around 25-30 people and hosts regular singing classes, rehearsals, karaoke sessions and community singalongs. Members also gather there for Jam Along Vaanga, where they perform solo or duet songs before an audience.

As participation grew, the community began extending beyond its studios. An invitation from Cookgram restaurant in Anna Nagar led to regular singalong sessions at the venue on the first and third Friday of every month. The sessions, which combine music with a shared meal, accommodate around 65 to 70 participants and are consistently full. The group has since partnered with an event venue in Adyar for larger singalong sessions and has also received requests from a venue on OMR to host similar events. A majority of those who join are above the age of 30. "Most activities in music are designed for children or youngsters. We wanted to create something for people in their thirties, forties, fifties and beyond. Many of them are not looking for a career in music. They simply want a place where they can sing without being judged," says Naggeshwerran.

The organisation follows a structured cinema music curriculum rather than teaching only individual songs. Learners are introduced to concepts such as pitch, rhythm and expression through familiar film songs. Since 2020, the team has released lessons for nearly 300 Tamil film songs, each available on YouTube for learners to revisit.

As interest grew, the organisers realised members wanted opportunities to sing outside the classroom. This led to the launch of Jam Along Vaanga, a karaoke programme where participants perform solo or duet songs before an audience. "We call it 'Bathroom to Green Room'. Many people only sing inside their homes. We wanted to create a path where they could first learn, then practise and finally perform before an audience," says Naggeshwerran.

The community now has around 3,000 members across WhatsApp groups, with participants from 26 countries joining both physical and online events.

An auction of singers

The group also organises Paattu Paarak, a singing competition inspired by the Indian Premier League. Participants are grouped into teams of six through a conceptual auction, without any exchange of money. Teams then compete in a cricket-style format, chasing each other's total scores across multiple rounds. The finals are organised as fundraising events, with the proceeds donated to charitable organisations. In the past two years, funds raised through the competition have been contributed to Akshaya Homes, a free residential home for destitute senior citizens.

Registrations for all events are managed through the group's PP Music mobile app. Participants can register, make payments and reserve slots for singalongs, competitions and other programmes through the app. Paadarivom Padipparivom has kept the registration fee for a singalong event at ₹299 to make it accessible to more people. Members with an annual subscription can attend events without paying separately, as the fee is included in their membership.

Beyond registrations, the app functions as a learning platform. Users can access free teaching videos, submit recordings of songs for feedback from mentors, and receive personalised comments on areas for improvement. It also features a "Voice Bank", where aspiring singers can store their recordings, a digital library of solo and duet lessons in Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam and Hindi for annual members, competition registrations, and a chat section that allows members to interact with one another.

A singalong on wheels today

The Bus Singalong is Paadarivom Padipparivom's latest initiative. The Bus Singalong on August 2 with two routes across Chennai was initially planned with one bus for around 50 participants. When registrations opened through the group's mobile app, around 40 people signed up within one and a half hours. The response led to the addition of a second bus, taking the total registrations to around 85-90.

The bus sing-along event will take place from 3:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. Registrations have now closed, as the organisers have already received 90 registrations and booked two buses, which have reached full capacity.

Looking ahead, the organisers are exploring the possibility of hosting their next sing-along event aboard the Cordelia Cruise. While discussions are still in the preliminary stages, those interested can stay updated by following the group's Instagram page for future announcements and registration details.

Honouring Kalam through service

Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam's 11th memorial day was observed with a slew of service-based activities at MGR Nagar

Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam Youth Development Organization, located at Govindasamy Street in MGR Nagar, commemorated the 11th memorial day of former president Dr.

A.P.J. Abdul Kalam on July 27, 2026 through a series of meaningful community service initiatives.

The programme was conducted under the leadership of M. Gopi, president, E. Easaya, secretary,

V.N.R Raj Kumar, treasurer, E.K. Prath, vice president,

M. Muthuraj, joint secretary of the organisation, says a press release.

Members, along with school students, local residents, and well-wishers, gathered to pay heartfelt floral tributes to Dr. Kalam by garlanding his portrait and remembering his invaluable contributions to the nation. Inspired by his vision of a greener and more developed India, the participants planted tree saplings at 8:30 a.m. in the presence of students and volunteers, the release adds.

As part of the day's social service activities, the organisation distributed free meals to members of the public at 1:00 p.m. In a gesture of compassion and inclusivity, a three-wheeled bicycle was presented to Vedavalli, a differently abled woman, to support her mobility and independence, says the release.

What will Chennai look like in 2096?

July 25 was a memorable day for more than 100 children from the dhobigat communities of Chetpet. At Yein Udaan's eighth annual day function, children presented 'Vanakkam Chennai 2096: A time travel story of hope' before an audience of 300 people at Shree Geetha Bhavan Trust in Gopalapuram.

The production provided a meaningful platform for children from an underserved urban community to showcase their talent, build confidence, and experience the joy of performing on a big stage.

Nawabzada Mohammed Asif Ali, Dewan and heir-apparent to the Prince of Arcot; Begum Seema Ahmed, a peace activist and a member of the Arcot Royal Family; and Revathi Sai Prakash, Director of Sairam Institutions, were the chief guests.

Seeing their children dressed in colourful costumes, performing with all their heart, and receiving applause from a large audience was a moment of pride for the parents, said a release.

The excitement of rehearsals, interactions with the producers, wearing their costumes, seeing the stage transformed by the LED display, and finally performing and hearing the audience applaud made them feel like actors for one evening. In addition, they were dancers and storytellers, too.

The story explored the choices we make today and the world we leave behind, touching upon the importance of protecting our water, trees, soil, food and environment, the release said.

Yein Udaan welcomes individuals, organisations and institutions interested in supporting children and communities through partnerships, volunteering and collaborative opportunities. Email: malavika@yeinudaan.org.

Medisoc launches mobile applications

Medisoc, a unit of Good Samaritan Health Care Services, has launched its mobile and web applications to drive the digital transformation of healthcare.

The event was held at VHS - M.A. Chidambaram College of Nursing, Taramani, and saw more than 250 healthcare professionals, nursing faculty and industry stakeholders.

Dr. Shankar Shanmugam, Registrar, Tamil Nadu Nurses and Midwifery Council, and Principal, Madras Medical College, was the chief guest.

Amalraj Ravi, founder and chairman of Medisoc and Good Samaritan Health Care Services, said the applications have been developed with the vision of making quality healthcare more accessible, affordable, and patient-centric.

Medisoc is a digital platform that removes intermediaries, allowing patients to choose their preferred providers while enabling professionals to work independently and flexibly, according to a release.

The services offered include doctor home visits, nursing care, physiotherapy, baby care, elder care, and tele consultation.

A range of services are offered like scheduling to book verified nurses, doctors, and therapists from home; professional medical care at the doorstep; transparent pricing; secure digital records; and an escalation and refund mechanism.

Musical tribute to MLV

Sri Krishna Gana Sabha resonated with musical brilliance as Team Mohana from Dubai, presented a 'Guruvandanam' (Carnatic choir - season 8), titled 'Thukadas and More', dedicated to Carnatic musician M. L. Vasanthakumari.

Nearly 250 participants from India and abroad sang MLV Amma's songs in perfect harmony.

Playback singer Sudha Raghunathan curated 11 of MLV Amma's songs and meticulously mentored the singers.

Yogam Santhanam, Lavanya Sundararaman, Vidya Kalyanaraman, Bhavya Hari, Sangeetha Narayanan and Suchithra Balasubramanian were honoured for their invaluable contribution to preserving MLV Amma's musical heritage.

Aiswarya Vaikunth (violin), Sangeetha Narayanan (veena), N. Ramakrishnan (mridangam), and R. Raman (morsing) were among those who sang. Saritha Krishnakumar guided the singers.

The evening concluded with the dance production 'Sri Raama Paadama - The Bala Kanda Odyssey,' presented by Sri Sai Nrithyalaya and H. N. Nandhini Suresh, a graceful interpretation of Saint Thyagaraja's compositions that brings the Ramayana to life.

On July 25, while Gen Z “cockroaches” grabbed the headlines from Jantar Mantar in Delhi, a bunch of artists from the same generation in Chennai were using their artworks to stir people’s conscience. The curator of the exhibition at Mada Square in Thiruvananthapuram, 18-year-old Samrutha SB on the why of it

LIFFY THOMAS

On July 25, when those supporting the protest launched by Cockroach Janata Party in New Delhi were rejoicing over the resignation of Dharmendra Pradhan as education minister, a teenager from Chennai was quietly assembling 11 aspiring artists whose craft is a commentary on systemic injustices.

Eighteen-year-old Samrutha SB is a student of BA Social Science at Azim Premji University in Bengaluru. In Chennai for her semester break, Samrutha decided to bring these artists with their works that open up avenues for conversations on fractures in social structures.

The trigger to do something to create a democratic space for dialogue and collective art stemmed from an experience she encountered in college and the recent protests that happened at various cities to show solidarity with the Cockroach Janata Party.

In February 2026, Azim Premji University was vandalised by ABVP

A message out of Mada Square

The group of artists; Samrutha SB; and visitors taking in the artworks.

members over an event organised by SPARK, an informal reading circle constituted by students of the University. Many students including Samrutha were witness to that chaos on campus.

“These event frustrated me on many fronts, but what disheartened me the most: one, the institution’s harsh actions against the wellbeing of its students and two, while most of us came together to question the administration, some students were fearful or apathetic,” says the resident of Neelankarai.

Samrutha felt like she needed to act on the frustration if she wanted to see change. “And art has always been my best companion at such times,” says the alumna of Chettinad Hari Shree Vidyalayam.

The public art exhibition showcased at Pagir on July 25 and Mada Square on July 26, both in Thiruvananthapuram, blended magic realism with themes of social justice.

Over four weeks, the artists, a majority of them students, engaged in discussions on art and political resistance, reflecting on their own social locations, questioning what distinguishes a system from a community, and grappling with the understanding that the personal is political.

These sessions were facilitated by resource persons which included Poorani C, founder, The Penn Collective; Venkataraghavan, author; and Anjana, a narrative art therapist. The exhibition was timely. Like the protesters at Jantar Mantar that demanded accountability, the platform served to express dissent against social and political systems of power and reimagine a more just world.

“I was happy to see people from all walks of life coming to see the works. Art should be accessible for both visitors to view and for artists to exhibit, it should be relatable and most importantly it should come from a collective process,” she says. “My main aim was to politicise one another and ignite empathy for each other at this political moment through the discussion sessions as well as for the visitors. I wanted our artworks to be a response to everything we discussed and a seed for conversation that went beyond passive viewership. Conversations around caste, class, gender and the self grew in pockets next to each of the artworks throughout the two days of the exhibition.”
