Designers spotlight botanical maximalism, handcrafted textures and immersive wall coverings in 2026

Anisha Menezes

The verdict is in. Wallpapers are here to stay. The Indian wallpaper market is expected to reach $947.14 million by 2030, according to the report 'India Wallpapers - Market Share Analysis, Industry Trends & Statistics, Growth Forecasts' (2025-2030). So, what was once considered a niche interior design choice is now finding more takers, thanks to a wider range of options, price points, and new innovations. We speak to designers and creators in this burgeoning wall covering space, on the trends that will shape the contours of this market. Timeless botanicals Maximalism took a brief intermission, but it is back in 2026 with main character energy. This time, it's not over the top; instead, it showcases botanicals in layers, creating a feeling of calm. Shabnam Gupta, founder of Peacock Life, a maximalist brand located in Mumbai, says, "Botanicals are timeless, especially for those who live in concrete jungles; there's an inherent craving for nature within us. I do see a change towards larger, bolder motifs, too." It's not just foliage, but layered storytelling with texture that's taking centre stage. For a design studio in Mumbai that champions hand-made, textured and embroidered wallpaper, Sahiba Madan, founder of Kalakaari Haath, says minimalism might have had its moment, but maximalism is making a comeback. "Growing up, we have been surrounded by print, pattern and colour. In the past few years, people have created minimal spaces with bare plastered walls and clean lines. But now, I predict people are slowly coming back to what their roots were, to acknowledge the balanced kind of maximalism that we have all grown up with."

Rise of vertical mobility

As cities build upward, elevators and smart mobility systems are becoming critical urban infrastructure

Sebi Joseph

India's urban transition is entering a decisive decade. In 2025, around 36% of the country's population was estimated to be living in cities, and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (UN DESA) projects that this proportion will approach 50% by 2050. Urbanisation on this scale is fundamentally reshaping how cities grow, how buildings are designed, and how people move within them.

For decades, urban mobility focused on shrinking distances across cities, with roads, metro lines, and transit corridors, for example. Now, as Indian cities become denser, and land is at a premium, vertical mobility is the key dynamic. How people move within buildings and through urban infrastructure is equally important.

New infrastructure

Cities such as Mumbai, where land scarcity has long constrained horizontal growth, are witnessing large-scale redevelopment of ageing housing societies into clusters of high-rise towers. Similar trends are now emerging across Delhi, Bengaluru, Gurugram and Hyderabad as urban land values rise and demand for housing and commercial space continues to grow. Vertical development allows cities to accommodate more residents and businesses within the land available, but it also introduces new planning challenges. A high-rise building cluster, housing hundreds or thousands of families or employees, functions like a micro-city.

GETTY IMAGES/ISTOCKPHOTO

In this context, vertical mobility systems, elevators, escalators and smart movement technologies are the core infrastructure that determine whether dense urban development can function safely, reliably and efficiently.

After all, by 2050, one in five people in India will be over 60, according to the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) India report, which means changing the way we think not only about designing new infrastructure but also about the longevity and modernisation needs of existing equipment is essential. As buildings become taller and more densely occupied, reliability is critical. Advances in technology are enabling a more proactive approach to managing these systems. Modern elevators can incorporate sensors that monitor operational patterns, component wear, and usage cycles. The data generated through these systems allows service providers to detect potential issues often before they could lead to disruptions.

From a developer's perspective, investing in intelligent mobility systems is about the long-term performance of an asset. Buildings that maintain reliable mobility infrastructure tend to deliver better operational outcomes, stronger user satisfaction, and greater long-term value.

As buildings rise higher than ever and urban populations continue to grow, infrastructure planning must adapt to support this new dimension of urban living. Recognising the role of vertical mobility and planning for it early will be key to building cities that sustain the economic activity and opportunities that continue to draw people to them.

Nilaya, a luxury brand by Asian Paints, with premium wall coverings, collaborated with Ahmedabad-based fashion and design studio Tilla in 2023. Their ‘Painted Forest’ collection remains a firm favourite with homeowners even today. The biophilic range featuring tropical landscapes of palms and plantains, frangipani, kachnar (mountain ebony) and jackfruit, designed by artist Jisha Unnikrishnan, drew inspiration from the garden at Amethyst, the designer boutique and cafe in Chennai. “Evergreen designs such as bold botanicals and fresh florals have consistently been among the top choices, valued for their ability to infuse freshness and dimension into compact urban homes,” states Amit Syngle, MD and CEO, Asian Paints.

Botanical wallpapers lush with floral and fruit trees offer larger-than-life green landscapes that instantly connect with city goers. For those looking for a refreshing change of pace, biophilic design with a pastel palette is a no-brainer, explains Rukmini Ray Kadam, a Mumbai-based décor stylist and founder of Trumatter Living. “There is a strong return to nature and craft, but interpreted in a modern way. I see a clear move towards texture over just prints. Think hand-drawn florals, gentle geometrics, surfaces that feel almost textile-like. Colours are calmer but deeper: mossy greens, smoky blues, clay and parchment.”

How to cover walls

When opting for wallpaper over traditional painted walls, there are a few considerations to keep in mind. Is wallpaper suited to every space? Are patterns decided by the form and function of a room? Designers have different schools of thought on how to cover walls. “Be bold. Wrap the room completely,” explains Gupta. “It sounds counterintuitive, but when you cover all four walls, the boundaries dissolve, and the space feels larger, not smaller.”

For Rambha Seth, a Chennai-based designer and architect, and co-founder of Studio Neon Attic, “when wallpapers enter the conversation, it’s usually situational. We find it works best in children’s rooms and nurseries, where imagery adds energy. In large office environments, especially on windowless floors, it offers visual relief without increasing material density.” While bold wallpaper statements may be the mantra this year, Harshita Nookula, visual merchandising lead at Livspace, a home interior and renovation company

Neelvana brings forests indoors

January 19 marked the launch of Neelvana, a collection of panoramic wallpapers by Life n Colours, co-created with acclaimed interior designer Shabnam Gupta. The collection presents 25 wallpapers across four colourways — Sage Green, Azure Blue, Sepia and Charcoal — extending across walls, ceilings, murals, panels and wardrobes. “The intention was to reinterpret the forest as a surface system, introducing a fresh sense of shade, scale, and layering without visual excess. These deep forests exist as an abstracted sanctuary rather than a direct reference,” says Shabnam. Co-founder Apourva Sharma adds, “The palette in this collection mirrors the shifting soul of the forest throughout the day: the fresh moss green of morning, the warm sepia of high noon, the ethereal blue of dusk, and a charcoal grey that captures the mystery of the deep woods.”

What is trending

- Wild botanicals: From lush tropical foliage to delicate florals.
 - Heritage ink: Block-printed wallpapers with organic patterns and cultural influence create warmth and authenticity.
 - Natural and earth-derived materials: Natural fibres and lime-washed surfaces to match India’s climate.
 - Innovation in materiality: Bio-based substrates, recycled fibres, straw integrated backings, low-VOC (volatile organic compound) coatings, acoustic-enhancing wallpapers, anti-microbial finishes, light-responsive pigments, and thermally adaptive surfaces.
 - Texture over tone: Neutral, textured wallpapers focus on subtle depth rather than bold colour. Linen-like finishes, fine grains, and muted tones create a refined backdrop for modern interiors.
 - Dimensional drama: Raised patterns and textured effects transform flat surfaces into striking architectural features.

Handmade for the win

Indian couture designer Sabyasachi Mukherjee has designed wallpaper collections for Nilaya by Asian Paints, with hand-painted motifs created by The Sabyasachi Art Foundation. Kalkaari Haath uses traditional embroidery techniques on its bespoke wall art. With design houses embracing Indian heritage-led wall coverings, there is a shift towards handcrafted motifs by smaller studios championing craft forms. “Tactility will be a major driver. Textures, woven grass cloths, and 3D-embossed surfaces will lead interior preferences. Homeowners are demanding tailored design solutions,” says Syngle. “Bespoke wallpapers, custom murals, and designs inspired by traditional Indian arts, block printing, kalamkari, and miniature motifs are entering even mid-segment homes.”

Technique-forward wall coverings that offer texture and craft-led storytelling will be popular in 2026. “Across India, a growing wave of small and independent wallpaper vendors is reviving age-old craft traditions through handcrafted, artisanal designs,” says Nookula. “Craft clusters specialising in block printing in Bagru [Rajasthan] and Bagh [Madhya Pradesh] are inspiring boutique wallpaper collections. A rising sub-trend within this movement is the emergence of hand-painted kolam-inspired decals and wallpapers, offering a culturally rooted yet contemporary way to decorate entrances, puja rooms, and feature walls.”

The writing is on the wall, whether botanicals or block prints, traditional art forms or textured elements, wallpaper is about storytelling. With boutique wallpaper studios, designer collections and handcrafted options, it is just a matter of picking what suits your mood board, budget and palette.

used as a bandaid — it is not a quick fix to cover up bad paint jobs, cracks or crevices. “Don’t use it because you didn’t know what to do with a wall. Wallpaper works beautifully as a feature in living rooms, bedrooms, dining spaces, powder rooms, and even passages where you want some drama. Where it struggles is in very small rooms with busy designs, or in damp areas without the right material.” Sanchit Arora, principal architect and design researcher of Renesa Architects in New Delhi, follows a simple rule of thumb when working with wallpaper across commercial and hospitality spaces: “Don’t use it in external areas, especially due to moisture in India’s humid cities. In this climate, even moisture-proof wallpaperers don’t really work well.”
