5 homes built for heat

Architects and design studios share examples of how Indian homes are responding to rising temperatures and longer summers

Rashmi Gopal Rao

To say that the Indian summer of 2026 has been unforgiving is an understatement. With temperatures ranging from 42-45 degrees Celsius across many parts of the country, heat is no longer a seasonal inconvenience – it is beginning to reshape how homes are designed and built.

“We are increasingly seeing climate as the starting point of design rather than something that gets addressed later through mechanical systems. With rising temperatures and longer summers, the way a house sits on the site, its orientation and how it opens up have become far more critical than ever before,” says Neelesh Kumar, principal architect of 23 Degrees Design Shift, a Hyderabad-based architecture and design firm.

Kumar added that there is a clear shift away from sealed, inward-looking homes that depend entirely on air-conditioning, towards spaces that can breathe and adjust through the day.

“This means thinking carefully about how sunlight enters, how heat is blocked, and how air can move naturally across spaces,” he says.

Her further adds that as architects they are trying to reduce heat gain at the source by shaping the built form itself, rather than relying on technology to correct it later. This renewed focus on orientation, wall mass, and shaded edges is bringing climate-led thinking back to the centre of design decisions.

Rising temperatures are fundamentally shifting architectural priorities. Passive cooling, climate-responsive layouts, and heat mitigation are now being treated as core design elements rather than afterthoughts.

Threads of lineage

From mats and cushions to kitchenware and sarees, Anvaya explores traditional crafts at home

Team Property Plus

Think less gallery pieces, more objects you can live with. From handwoven mats and cushions to brass kitchenware and heirloom textiles, Aabharnam's Anvaya brings craft into the home, foregrounding how traditional practices continue to shape everyday living. Held at Amethyst from April 28 to 30, the exhibition builds on the foundation's long engagement with Indian textiles, with curator Neha Varma, a third-generation revivalist. Anvaya arrives in Chennai as the foundation's first independent showcase in the city, following two acclaimed editions at Jahan-e-Khusrau in Delhi, inaugurated by Prime Minister Narendra Modi in 2025 and Union Minister of State for External Affairs, Kirti Vardhan Singh earlier this year.

Meaning 'lineage' in Sanskrit, Anvaya brought together 18 master artisans, placing museum-quality works alongside functional pieces – Kantha textiles, Pattachitra, Kalamkari, Pichwai, and Sanjhi – while curator brand Aabharnam's own Banarasi and Chanderi sarees anchor the show in living textile traditions. "Indian art, craft, and textile traditions, when nurtured with integrity, naturally transcend time. These crafts haven't survived by chance, but through the deliberate and quiet resilience of the hands that carry them forward, and the patrons who support them," says Verma.

Brass, Maharashtra

Copper and brass plates, water bottles, and kitchenware anchor Ranvir Singh's practice. The Pune-based artisan, a third-generation craftsman, traces his lineage back nearly 300 years to the Peshwas, including Baji Rao I. His work is marked by intricate surface patterns formed through constant, uninterrupted hammering—a physically demanding process that leaves no visible gaps, with each piece taking up to two days.

₹6,000 upwards

₹1,800 onwards

Pattu Weaving, Rajasthan

Khetaram Sumra's wall screenings and cushions translate pattu weaving for contemporary interiors. The Rajasthan-based artisan works with the traditional weft-based technique to revive a practice sustained by his father and grandfather, while retaining the original weaving pattern. His Rajasthan wildlife-inspired cotton collection took five years to develop.

₹10,000 upwards

Madur mat weaving, West Bengal

Among the practitioners is Akhila Jana, a fourth-generation mat weaver from West Bengal, whose maslan mats are handmade from madurkathi grass. Designed instinctively, the mats absorb sweat, are suited for summer, and are sustainable, with notable longevity and durability. Each piece takes two to three months to make. The practice supports around 20 people in manufacturing and a larger network of nearly 400. From sleeping bags and file holders to caps and shoes, the range extends well beyond traditional mats.

ORR emerges as Chennai's growth spine

At The Hindu panel, experts will discuss how the corridor is shaping the city's expansion and real estate growth

Team Property Plus

Chennai's Outer Ring Road (ORR) is fast emerging as a defining axis of the city's next phase of growth, shaping conversations around expansion, infrastructure, and liveability. Against this backdrop, The Hindu is organising a focused discussion on May 6, 2026, at the Taj Coromandel, with Casagrand as sponsor. The event will feature two panel discussions: 'Chennai's Next Expansion: Why ORR Will Define It,' and 'The ORR Opportunity: Infrastructure, Liveability, and Long-Term Value'. Jerry Kingsley, India head, JLL research & city lead, capital markets Chennai; Sanjay Chugh, city head and director of Anarock; S. Janak- arajan, former professor and currently South Asia consortium for interdisciplinary water resources studies and various other stakeholders will participate. "It is a structural pivot in how the city will grow over the next decade," said Chugh, noting that the corridor enables a more distributed, polycentric model by unlocking land for planned urbanisation. This transition from speculative growth to a more policy-led approach is echoed by Kingsley, who described the 62-km stretch as "the city's next major economic and real estate growth axis," linking key industrial clusters from Minjur to

Development along ORR has evolved from being primarily industrial and logistics-focused to a more balanced, mixed-use ecosystem

C.G. SATHISH
Deputy managing director, Casagrand

Vandalur under the guidance of the Chennai Metropolitan Development Authority. Developers, including C.G. Sathish, deputy managing director, Casagrand, pointed to the corridor's steady evolution. "Development along ORR has evolved from being primarily industrial and logistics-focused to a more balanced, mixed-use ecosystem," he said, highlighting the emergence of integrated townships and improving social infrastructure. Unlike OMR's IT-led growth or GST Road's transit-driven expansion, the ORR is positioned as an infrastructure-first corridor with long-term potential. For end-users, this translates into a different kind of urban promise. "It offers a more open and less congested environment... appealing for families seeking a quieter lifestyle," Sathish added, even as stakeholders acknowledged that parts of the social ecosystem are still catching up. Still, as Chugh noted, the corridor must be viewed as "a long-term structural opportunity rather than a short-term cycle," underscoring a broader consensus that the ORR's growth is here to stay.

Pleasant sight

The premium is the view

In Mumbai's luxury market, sea-facing homes are reshaping price benchmarks, driven by scarcity, and status

Beyond the apartment

The view itself becomes part

Developers are also aligning design with this demand. Larger balconies, open layouts and floor-to-ceiling windows are now standard in projects where the view is a key selling point

Redevelopment wave

Most of Mumbai's new luxury housing is coming from redevelopment. Older structures are Higher floors offer wider and

Coastal constraint

Demand continues to come
